Hurley Hits White Paper

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) demanded yesterday that the Administration "make it relentlessly clear" China has not been abandoned to the Communists.

In commenting on the White Paper on China made public Friday by the State Department, he said it was obvious that both Nationalist China and the United States had made "tragic mistakes."

"Our chief mistakes," the Republican foreign policy leader said, "were (1) the price we paid at Tehran and Yalta, at China's expense, for Russia's belated and unnecessary entry into the Jap war; (2) our well-intentioned but impractical insistence upon a Nationalist-Communist coalition."

Meanwhile, it was reported yesterday that high United States diplomatic and military experts are still trying to decide whether this country should act to save Formosa from possible seizure by the Chinese Communists.

Virtual Intervention

In secret talks said to have reached the showdown stage the military has insisted on direct action in respect to the strategic island, according to the United Press. The State Department is reported to feel any direct action would amount to American intervention in the Chinese civil war, which the United States has scrupulously avoided.

Chinese Communist propaganda has been calling for "liberation" of Formosa, where Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek has upwards of 250,000 troops, a number of planes and naval units and some 300 million dollars in gold reserves.

Patrick J. Hurley, who headed a wartime mission to China, assailed the White Paper yesterday as "a smooth alibi for the pro-Communists in the State Department."

His statement declared that "nearly all the officials relieved by me in China because they were pro-Communist are now in the State Department — presumably writing White Papers."

Blueprint for Conquest

The Yalta agreement was characterized by Hurley as "a blueprint for Communist conquest of China." He said the late President Roosevelt was a sick man when he signed the agreement at Yalta.

Senator Vandenberg, top Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the President Quirino Of Philippines Arrives Monday

President Elpidio Quirino of the Philippines is due to arrive at National Airport at 4:30 p. m. Monday for a three-day official visit here.

President Truman will head the greeting party and both chiefs of state will make short addresses. Philippine Ambassador Joaquin M. Elizalde will lead a delegation from the Philippine Embassy and the local Filipino community.

After a state dinner Monday night at the Carlton Hotel and a first night at Blair House, President Quirino will move to the Philippine Embassy. A round of activities in his honor is scheduled before he leaves Thursday for a two-day stay in New York.

The flagship Manila of the Philippines Airlines will bring President Quirino to Washington. It is being piloted by Colonel Otis Bryan, who flew the plane that carried President Roosevelt to Teheran and Yalta.

Italy, Yugoslavia Sign New Pact On Peace Aims

Rome, Aug. 6 (NYHT).—Italy and Yugoslavia, which once glared at one another from either side of the Iron Curtain, signed today their second agreement in three days aimed at more cordial relations.

The new agreement settled Yugoslav demands on Italy under five sections of the two-year-old Italian peace treaty. On Thursday the two signed a one-year 90-million-dollar trade pact.

Italy agreed to pay Yugoslavia slightly less than four million dollars for wartime damage.

Anti-Red Union

Korea Chief And Chiang Weigh Pact

Chinhae, Korea (Sunday), Aug. 7 (AP).—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and President Syngman Rhee of the South Korean republic held their first conference today on a Pacific pact against the Communists.

Chiang and Rhee may complete their talks Monday and are expected to issue a joint statement.

Chiang flew to Korea from Formosa for the talks.

There was no indication the two leaders would comment on the White Paper criticizing Nationalist China which was issued by the U. S. State Department.

Earlier today Chiang and Rhee reviewed a parade of Korean naval personnel at this south coast port.

After the review Chiang and Rhee drove to the home of the commanding officer of the Chinhae naval base for the first formal talks. Chiang is staying at the heavily guarded home of the base commander.

Rhee and Chiang issued statements indicating the Pacific Union, first projected four weeks ago by Chiang and President Elpidio Quirino of the Philippines, would be discussed fully.

Chiang is expected to remain for three days. His route was not disclosed, but it was generally believed he had flown direct from Formosa, his island redoubt off the China coast.

Shortly after Chiang's arrival, the United States Information Service obtained a copy of yesterday's American White Paper on China and prepared a Korean translation. Chiang gave no intimation he had seen or heard of it.

Greeks Open New Fight on 5000 Rebels

Planes, Tanks Aid Troops in Grammos Mountain Offensive

Athens, Greece, Aug. 6 (AP).—The Greek army today unleashed a full-scale offensive, supported by planes and tanks, against the estimated 5000 Communist guerillas in the Grammos Mountains.

The battle started with troops attacking along two sides of a 250-square-mile triangle based on the Albanian border and with its apex at Eptahorion. The triangle is anchored on the border northwest of Nestorion and northeast of Konitsa.

The general staff, announcing the offensive, said preliminary action which had been going on for two days had ended and that the battle now is in its main phase.

New troops supported by tanks and planes are being hurled into the fighting.

Preliminary successes were scored on the northeastern front, where heavily fortified heights were captured in combined operations by the air force and infantry, the staff said. It added that "Communist bandits" counterattacked vigorously several times but were repulsed in their efforts to retake Alevitsa, Kapsalia, Lefkadia and Tabouri heights west of Nestorion.

Other successes were scored by the army on the southwest front where heights covering approaches to Pyrsoyanni and Kemenix were captured, the communique said.

The United Nations Special Commission on the Balkans (UNSCOB) reported that one of its planes photographing fortifications along the border was fired on from gun positions within Albania opposite Alevitsa. UNSCOB said the guerillas were using 105 mm. guns apparently coming from a foreign source.

The report also said the photographs "clearly show" the guerillas have prepared a line of trenches extending across the Greek-Albanian frontier.

The general staff said troops were fired on from another height in Albania. The announcement added this "attack was supported by Albanians."

There was no mention of impending operations against the Vitsi triangle, where more than 7,000 guerillas are holed up west of Phorina.

'Tough Road Ahead'

By Robert F. Donovan
NYHT News Service

With the controversial issue of the President's broad power to arm any nation removed from the revised $1,450,000,000 military assistance bill, criticism of the program shifted yesterday to the cost.

Senator George (D., Ga.), a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he was not committed to any such figure as $1,450,000,000, that it was "too big" and should be cut in half.

Representative Vorys (R., Ohio), a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, commented: "Unless the amount is substantially cut, there's an awfully tough road ahead."

Senator Taft (R., Ohio), said that while the revised arms bill, with its limitations on the President's power to ship weapons abroad, is an improvement over the original, he thought he would vote against it.

Dulles Also Critical

Taft, one of 13 Senators who voted against ratification of the North Atlantic Pact, has based his opposition to the arms program not so much on the cost as on the danger it may lead to an armament race with Russia and eventually to war.

Another who criticized the cost of the arms program yesterday was Senator Dulles (R., N. Y.), but his objection differed from that of certain other Senators.

Dulles said he did not think the scope of the program should be diminished. He remarked he did not wish to cut it "by a single bullet." But he explained he thought it should be fitted in at an earlier date with the joint arms implementation program to be developed by the 12 Atlantic Pact nations through the council created by the treaty.

If this were done, he said, the duration of the program now under consideration in Congress could be lessened, and thus the total appropriation cut.

Truman Firm on Figure

While President Truman made various concessions to critics of the arms program in the drafting of the revised bill introduced Friday, he is standing firm on his request for a full $1,450,000,000 authorization. In this stand he has the support of Senator Connally (D., Tex.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Repreesntative Kee (D., W. Va.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Senator Connally told reporters yesterday: "If the program is worth doing at all, its worth doing well. I'm for the full amount."

His committee will open joint

Grenades Kill 11 In Synagogue At Damascus

From Press Dispatches

Damascus, Syria, Aug. 6.—Eleven persons were killed and 19 seriously injured last night when three hand grenades were thrown into a synagogue in the city's Jewish quarter, an official communique said tonight.

The casualties were members of the Jewish congregation who were at prayer when the grenades exploded.

The official explanation was that the group responsible was "probably Communist." Informed sources said, however, the bombing probably was the work of a small group of non-Communist, anti-Jewish Arab elements, who also oppose the government.

White House Call Linked To Contract

Maragon Said to Have Telephoned 'Someone' To Arrange Talks

By The Associated Press

Evidence that John Maragon turned to the White House concerning more than one Government contract for businessmen has been obtained in the "5 per center" inquiry, Senator Hoey (D., N. C.) said yesterday.

Hoey discussed secret testimony on that point with reporters after Senator Mundt (R., S. Dak.) reported officials of a low-bidding Detroit auto parts company said they got fast clearance on a $280,000 Army contract after reaching an Army officer. This meeting was arranged, it was related, through a call to someone at the White House by Maragon, who once held a White House pass.

Meanwhile, James V. Hunt, a key figure in the 5 per center probe, announced he has instructed his lawyers to file a libel suit against the New York Herald Tribune. It was a Herald Tribune story that led to the investigation by a subcommittee headed by Hoey. The Senators seek to learn whether influence figured in award of any Government contracts.

Hunt said the Herald Tribune was trying to get the Pulitzer Prize "by the most vicious kind of innuendo."

"Their irresponsible half-truths have gone a long way toward ruining my business," Hunt added in a statement issued through his attorney, Roger Q. White. White refused to disclose the damages to be asked, but said it would be "in six figures."

Hunt asserted that the newspaper printed its first story June 21 "without making any attempt to

Emergency Declared In Hawaii

Governor Calls On Dock Strikers To Resume Work Under New Law

Honolulu, Aug. 6 (AP).—Gov. Ingram M. Stainback tonight proclaimed a state of emergency in Hawaii's 98-day-old dock strike and called on the stevedoring industry and the strikers to resume operations.

The Governor acted under a law passed early this morning by the Hawaii Legislature in emergency session. Stainback signed the bill this afternoon.

The Governor said if dock work is not resumed immediately he would issue orders "taking possession of any or all stevedoring companies."

After 3-Hour Conference

The proclamation was issued after a three-hour meeting of the territorial Attorney General's staff, officials of two Honolulu stevedoring companies and the president of Hawaii Stevedores, Ltd., a non-union firm formed after the strike began 98 days ago.

There was no discussion with the CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. The union had announced earlier it would not work for the government.

Harry Bridges, ILWU president, declared that "legislation will not load or unload ships."

The union, furthermore, announced it would challenge constitutionality of the act as soon as the government made its first move to operate the docks.

Call for Operation First

Under terms of the law, the Governor must first call on the union and the seven struck companies to resume operations. If advised that they cannot or will not, he then must proclaim an emergency and take over operation of the docks for 180 days or until the strike ends.

Shortly before the Legislature completed passage of the act early today, the approximately 2000 strikers voted unanimously not to work for the Government.

Bridges, who flew here yesterday, said on arrival that no law of the Hawaiian Legislature could force handling of Hawaiian cargoes on the Pacific Coast. He declared Coast longshoremen would take no part in "Government scabbery."

"Beyond Our Power"

Hiram L. Fong, Republican Speaker of the House, said if Pacific Coast stevedores refused to handle Hawaii cargoes, 'that's beyond our power; it will be up to the Federal Government then."

The legislative act directs the Governor to take over the seven struck stevedoring companies and hire strikers so far as possible, paying the pre-strike wage of $1.40 an hour. The strike began May 1 to enforce a union demand for a raise to $1.72 an hour.

The law, good for 180 days, comes into effect immediately upon the Governor's proclamation of an emergency. It includes a loyalty oath for citizens and a non-Communist oath for aliens employed in the operation. (Many Hawaiian stevedores are Filipinos.)

Companies have 10 days in which to decide to be paid a fair rental on their equipment, to be determined by a court, or to take the operating profits, less a Government charge of one-fourth of one per cent of the gross.

Strikes or other interference with the Government operation are forbidden, with injunction action authorized to prevent them.

The Human Heart

Age-Old Secrets of Heart Laid Bare by Daring Surgery

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter
(First of Six Articles)

The human heart, cloaked in mysticism for ages, is today giving up its secrets to improved diagnosis and daring surgery.

The secrets have been locked in the steady throb of a seemingly tireless organ which resists inspection and defies correction.

Only in the past 10 years have doctors been able to inspect its running with reasonable certainty; ameliorate some of its deformities, and, in increasing degree, clear its fuel lines and "grind its valves" to better function and longer life.

Once believed to be the sacred site of the soul, the human heart today can be cupped in the surgeon's hands, artfully pumped back into life-saving rhythm, massaged with abrasives and rasped with a coarse file into renewed activity, or jolted out of its death-dealing "shakes" with drug injection or electric shock.

With animal experimentations, surgeons have gone even further. They've replaced sections of the heart's great vessels with plastic tubes, substituted plastic pea-in-valve devices for the heart's own gateways, and, if Soviet reports can be believed, have even exchanged the hearts of two frogs without death to either one.

Pains Relieved, Life Prolonged

Less dramatically, practitioners of internal medicine have furthered heart therapy to the point where the stricken need no longer wait in fearful quiet for the fatal seizure. New remedies and improvements on old ones ease the excruciating pains and prolong life and activity.

But for all the progress in the past decade, damaged hearts today take the terrifying toll of more than 620,000 lives a year in the United States. About eight times that number are forced to change their ways of living to cater to narrowing limitations of weakened and diseased hearts.

The progress that has been made against heart ills is remarkable, says Dr. James A. Shannon, medical research director of the

Rare 'Swearing Disease' Puts Cursing Victim in Hospital

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

A possible case of an extremely rare mental disease, in which a person suddenly blurts out an obscene expression at the most improper time and place, has been reported at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore.

So exceptional is the malady, known as Tourette's disease, that only a dozen cases have been catalogued in the world's medical history.

A person afflicted with the disease usually shows the first symptoms by making throat noises that sound like coughing, but are not exactly that. So said Dr. Edward Ascher, assistant professor of the Johns Hopkins Medical School and psychiatrist with the Henry Phipps Clinic—psychiatric division of the Hopkins hospital.

The "coughs" then develop into expressions, some of them insulting, such as "Shut up!" "Quiet!" and "No, never!" The expressions may or may not be addressed to persons in the vicinity.

From such comparatively mild language the afflicted person's words become more and more violent or obscene. "Damn you!" he may say abruptly and go on from there to longer-lettered vituperation, said Dr. Ascher.

Another symptom is for the person suddenly to jump into air from the chair where he is sitting, then to come back down in the

Delegate Proposal Revived As Substitute for Home Rule

Mountain Staters Back Self-Government Idea

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Five of nine new members of the House from the Mountain States and the Dakotas are undecided on the question of home rule for the District.

A check of the nine who were not in the Eightieth Congress when home rule was twice voted on showed five noncommittal, three leaning toward home rule and one against.

Adding current opinions of one who did not vote last year and of three whose two 1948 votes were divided, plus the 1948 votes of all others from the area, the 20 members from the Mountain States and the Dakotas divide this way on Washington home rule:

For, 11.
Against, 3.
Noncommittal, 6.

Many members expressed approval of home rule "in principle"

Plan to Be Discussed By Group on Monday

A group of House District Committee members is considering giving Washington a voteless delegate in Congress as a substitute for the Senate-approved home rule bill.

The proposal will be brought up at Monday's subcommittee meeting at which home rule measures are to be considered, a committee member told The Washington Post last night.

"Three or four of us have been kicking the idea around," the member said, asking that his name not be used. "I would assume the subcommittee has got to do something soon, and we think this House delegate idea would be a compromise substitute."

The House member said he understood such a delegate would be elected by District voters on a party basis like delegates from Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico.

30,000 Homeless In Stricken Nation; Industrial Town Virtually Razed

From Press Dispatches

Quito, Ecuador, Aug. 6.—The death toll in yesterday's earthquakes in central Ecuador rose to a reported 2800 tonight, with more than 5000 injured and 30,000 homeless.

The 2800 death toll figure was compiled from the following:

1. Ecuador radio stations broadcast that at least 1300 persons were killed in the town of Pelileo. The broadcasts said the figure had been confirmed officially, but did not name the source giving the figure.

2. President Galo Plaza Lasso of Ecuador, in a broadcast from Ambato, center of the quake-devastated area, reported that "more than 1000 were killed" at the nearby town of Patate.

3. It was announced officially that more than 500 were dead at Ambato. Unofficial reports said 560 bodies had been recovered at Ambato, with more than 5000 injured and 30,000 homeless in the nearby area.

Communication lines direct rom the earthquake area were crippled or disrupted, and it was impossible to get an official total of the deaths and destruction.

Others Hard Hit

Relief efforts were centered at Ambato where President Plaza was directing the efforts of more than 200 doctors and hundreds of relief workers, police and troops.

President Plaza broadcast that the town of Guano was another hard hit by the quakes. It was among a half-dozen small towns almost wiped out, while 15 communities were damaged severely with an unknown number of dead and injured.

Ambato, a flourishing city of nearly 30,000, virtually was razed. New shocks today felled still-standing walls and add to the terror.

The quake struck yesterday afternoon with an intensity of 8 degrees in the Sieberg scale, only 2 degrees below the maximum intensity.

At Riobamba, north of Ambato, inhabitants rushed from their homes this morning in a panic when the earth shook, fearing new quakes.

[The Ecuadorean Embassy in Washington said it had been officially confirmed that 500 were dead in Ambato alone. Ambassador Augusto Dillon said 70 per cent of the provincial capital's buildings were laid waste. Not only were 500 killed, Dillon said, but probably more than 2000 were injured and 10,000 people probably will be out of work in Ambato.]

The earthquake struck at 1 p. m. (EST) yesterday and continued until 1:45 p. m. in a series of six violent shocks. During the longest shock—which lasted 40 seconds—most of Ambato's biggest buildings crashed to the ground. It was Ecuador's worst disaster since colonial times.

Senate Farm Bill Favored By Brannan

Secretary Wants Production Payment Test Eliminated

By The Associated Press

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan yesterday was described as "favorable" toward a compromise farm price support bill drawn up by a Senate Agriculture subcommittee. He suggested, however, the junking of a highly limited test of the farmer subsidy plan he proposed last spring.

Senator Clinton Anderson (D., N. M.), told reporters the test provisions probably would remain in the measure. He said Brannan was "quite favorable to the bill as a compromise."

Brannan and two Agriculture Department aides spent more than three hours behind closed doors yesterday going over the bill drafted by Anderson and the subcommittee. He told reporters Anderson, who preceded him as Secretary of Agriculture, would "do all the talking."

Anderson said the Secretary and Senators had gone over the complicated measure word by word and line by line and Brannan made "fine and constructive suggestions."

He quoted Brannan as saying the proposed measure would "be better than the House bill."

That measure calls for continuing high-level price supports for major crops another year; repeals in advance a flexible price-drop

City Hopping Mad At Frogs Hopes They'll Croak

Mobile, Ala., Aug. 6 (AP).—Thousands of dime-sized brown frogs, apparently all hopped up over something, blitzed two streets here today.

The frogs jumped off on the invasion before dawn.

Paul English said his duck flock found the frogs at dawn and by 8 a. m. had eaten so many they couldn't stand.

"They just sat on the ground," said English, "and kept eating every frog that hopped close enough."

Where the frogs came from or why was a mystery.

Most residents said they didn't care anyway; they just wanted the frogs to croak.

11 Die, 2 Lost In Montana Forest Fire

15 U. S. Smokejumpers Caught in Trap; Blaze Rages Over 3000 Acres

Helena, Mont., Aug. 6 (AP).—With 11 known dead, grimy firefighters hunted doggedly today for two missing men in a blazing inferno that raged out of control in Montana's most picturesque forests.

Three of the dead were among 15 Federal Forest Service parachutists who leaped yesterday to the fire in the rugged Gates of the Mountains area about 25 miles northeast of Helena.

One 'chutist, Joseph Silva, died in a Helena hospital this afternoon. Other names were withheld.

One victim, James O. Harrison, Missoula, Mont., was a Forest Service employe at the nearby Canyon Ferry ranger station.

All the smokejumpers were trapped by wind-driven flames that exploded through tinder-dry trees.

As the fire spread uncontrolled over 3000 acres today, fear grew over the fate of the missing 'chutists.

Six firefighters were burned, including some of the parachutists. They were being brought in by helicopters this afternoon.

The first two men taken to the hospital were Silva and Bill Hellman, Kalispell, Mont. Hellman's condition was described as "fair."

One of the pair told Helena Forest Supervisor A. D. Moir the 15 smokejumpers landed all right but immediately "we were all enveloped in flames." Six hundred men were fighting the flames.

Associated Press writer Ed Johnson eyed the fire from the air and said flames leaped from cliff to cliff and exploding trees shot flames 50 feet into the air.

1-Pill Permanent Malaria Cure in 3 Days Reported

Chicago, Aug. 6 (AP).—The Chicago Herald-American tonight reported a "three-day permanent cure" with one pill has been discovered for malaria.

The newspaper said the discovery resulted from a seven million dollar Federal project involving experiments with 300 convicts at Statesville prison as malaria "guinea pigs."

Credited for the discovery are Dr. Alf Sven Alving, of the University of Chicago, and Dr. John Arnold, an Army scientist.

Still unnamed, the drug is known only as No. 13,272, the newspaper said.

"It was indicated the three-day malaria cure will be put on the market by May, 1950, the Herald-American said.

"The Herald-American was informed a single dose of the new drug in pill form will dissipate the malaria affliction in three days.

"State prison officials disclosed the experiments are in their final stage, with 25 convicts hospitalized with intense fever today as the result of 'malaria bites' given them on July 27."

The article said each "submitted voluntarily to several bites from the deadly anopheles species of Georgia-bred female mosquitoes . . ."

Strike Poll Starts Monday

Ford Loses Court Battle To Change Union Vote Sites

Detroit, Aug. 6 (AP).—The Ford Motor Co. failed today to obtain a court order to halt the holding of a strike vote among its employes at polling places close to headquarters of the CIO United Auto Workers.

In Lansing, Supreme Court Justice Leland W. Carr denied the company's plea for an order to force the State Labor Mediation Board to change the election setup.

The decision meant the strike vote among Ford's 80,000 employes in Michigan will start Monday as scheduled.

In a full-page advertisement in all three Detroit Sunday morning newspapers, Henry Ford, 2d, appealed to Ford employes to weigh carefully their strike decision.

"It is the apparent hope of union leadership," Ford asserted, "that you will vote yourself into another long strike. In fact, they seem to want only those of you who favor a strike actually to cast ballots in the coming election.

"That is why we are doing everything we can to have polling places located where the greatest possible number of you may vote."

Justice Carr ruled that the company's application for leave to appeal the State board's order setting up polling places be held in abeyance indefinitely. If the justice had granted the company's plea, it would have had the effect of postponing the election.

Since June 2 the company and the union have been negotiating on UAW demands for $100 monthly pensions, health benefits and a cost-of-living increase.

Reds Unchecked In Canton Drive

Hongkong, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—The Communist advance rolled unchecked toward Canton today as additional thousands of Nationalist troops deserted.

More than 90,000 Nationalist troops were said to have gone over to the Communist armies in the Changsha area alone. The defections rocked the Nationalist government as they closely followed publication of the United States White Paper which wrote off as lost the battle to save China from the Communists.

The Nationalist government, in an effort to strike back, ordered the arrest of plotting turn-coat generals.

Disclosure of the plot appeared to corroborate Secretary of State Dean Acheson's charges that the Nationalist army, from top ranking generals on down, lacked the will to fight the Communists.

The Nationalists already have ordered the arrest of Gen. Chen Ming-jen, newly appointed governor of Hunan, hitherto regarded as one of the most faithful followers of Chiang Kai-shek, and Chen's predecessor, Gen. Cheng Chien. Both still are in Communist territory.

Nationalist troops at Shaoyang, the refugee capital of Hunan Province, deserted to the Communists.

The troops at Changsha, Hunan capital, disclosed the surrender plot earlier by going over to the Reds.

The defections reportedly forced Central China commander Gen. Pai Chung-hsi to abandon all Nationalist strongholds north of Hengyang—the gateway to Kwangtung Province of which Canton is the capital.

Civilians began evacuating Hengyang in anticipation of fighting there.

A Red column driving through Kiangsi Province toward Kanchow captured Hushih, 25 miles north, and some Red elements were reported on the outskirts of Kanchow.

The Communists claimed new victories in northwest China, stronghold of Chinese Moslems. They claimed the capture of Tsinan and Changlang, near Lanchow, gateway to Middle Asia.

RECOMMENDED FOR SLOW BOAT TOURISTS—The State Department White Paper on China is 1¾ inches thick in paper binding. It contains 1054 pages

White Paper Held Unique In U. S. History

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The White Paper on "United States relations with China" is believed to be without parallel in American diplomatic history.

The document, issued Friday by the State Department, is unprecedented in its blunt, often harsh, criticism of a friendly government—the Nationalist regime in China, or what's left of it.

The 1054-page tome, precisely 1¾ inches thick and roughly 9 inches long and 6 inches wide, has been in the making since March. The volume was completed in the past five weeks by Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup and a staff of 80 assistants. It weighs nearly 3 pounds.

1944-'49 Period Stressed

The White Paper includes, besides a history of American-Chinese relations from 1884 to the present, a letter of transmittal by Secretary of State Acheson, a chronology of principal events and 186 annexes, most of which have been revealed to the public for the first time. The report itself stresses relations between 1944 and 1949.

Highlight of the hitherto unpublished papers is the report of Lieut. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, who undertook a fact-finding mission in China in the summer of 1947. The report was kept secret because, among other things, it called for China to give up Manchuria to a five-power trusteeship.

The document reviews Chiang-Communist relations, the ambassadorship of Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, the Yalta Agreement, the mission of Gen. George C. Marshall, the ambassadorship of John Leighton Stuart, the 1945-49 military picture, and the program of American economic aid.

The White Paper actually is a gray paper-covered document, the front cover being trimmed and printed in blue. It is called a White Paper because it's an important statement on foreign affairs.

British Originated Term

The term White Paper is borrowed from the British. Originally, it seems, the British issued important state papers in blue-backed reports, and they were called Blue Papers. A shortage of blue covers led to the use of white covers and that in turn led to the term White Paper—no matter what the color of the covers.

Copies of the White Paper may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., for $3 each.

Chinese See Hongkong Aid Pledged

Canton, China, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—First reaction today to publication of the U. S. State Department's White Paper on China was that the United States had pledged support to the British if the Chinese Communists attacked Hongkong.

Officials noted Secretary of State Dean Acheson's pledge of action should the Communist regime attempt aggression on China's neighbors.

They said this puts the United States squarely on record of supporting the British if the British forces clash with the Reds over Kowloon and Hongkong. The British apparently expect trouble there.

Chinese Views Divided

Canton, China, Aug. 6 (AP).—Chinese opinion was divided tonight on whether there ever again would be American aid for Nationalist China.

A government spokesman said official reaction to the United States White Paper on China—issued Friday in Washington—could not be expected for several days. Premier Yen Hsi-shan and other top Nationalists refused comment.

Best opinion was that there would would be no formal protest to Washington.

"The White Paper means we will get no more aid," said one member of the legislative Yuan. "The effect at the front will be very bad; our officers and men will be gravely discouraged."

He added that the White Paper's disclosure of acting President Li Tsung-jen secret May 5 message to President Truman might impair unity by being construed as an attack on Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Wang Shih-tseng, spokesman for the minority Youth Party, expressed belief the United States had not abandoned help for China and forecast some new aid plan.

Another source took the position that the White Paper was merely a whitewash of past American action or inaction in China and would have no particular bearing on the possibility of future aid.

(First Communist reaction was by Hga Shiang Pao, Communist Party paper in the British colony of Hongkong. It said the White Paper was a scheme to "create the illusion the American imperialists have been so disappointed by Chiang Kai-shek's reactionaries that they—the Americans—could have no part in the anti-Communist Pacific union being promoted by Chiang, President Quirino of the Philippines and President Syngman Rhee of South Korea."

British View Kem Bill as Interference

London, Aug. 6 (AP).—Britain's Socialist government had a new worry tonight added to its economic woes and Washington's delay in approving new dollar aid.

It was that American politicians were attempting to stick a tentative finger—via the Marshall Plan—into British internal affairs.

A Labor Party source expressed indignation at the proposal of Senator Kem (R., Mo.) to cut off American help from nations which nationalize basic industries. The question of nationalization is one of the hottest political subjects in all England.

"That would be a direct violation of American high-level promises to keep out of the internal policies of Marshall aid nations," he said.

Well informed quarters said this reaction represented the opinion of both Labor Party and the Socialist government of Britain.

Government Reported Aroused

Official government spokesmen, including the Foreign Office, were silent on the matter of Kem's amendment to the Marshall fund bill. But usually informed sources said both Whitehall and Downing Street were aroused at his attempted intervention into the touchy political problem here.

That bristling was not restricted to the Socialists. The Weekly Spectator—a Conservative publication—said in a dispatch from its Washington correspondent.

"Many a British Tory, though accustomed publicly to denounce the Labor government's nationalization plans, may well have privately bristled at the idea that an American holding public office should recommend such interference in British domestic affairs."

The Kem amendment caught Britain at a particularly delicate time. Conservatives under Winston Churchill had just opened their campaign with promises to halt the Labor government's nationalization program, if they win the general elections sometime before next autumn.

Take Up Challenge

Laborites, under Prime Minister Attlee, took up the challenge with a promise to pursue their program which already has put railroads, coal mines, airlines, communications, the Bank of England, gas and electricity under government ownership.

Another amendment to the Marshall Plan fund bill drew fire from British officials.

It proposed that ECA Administrator Hoffman negotiate with Britain to have this country ease its program of dismantling German industries.

British sources said that program had the prior agreement of both the United States and France and had been long delayed by American indecision on a safe industrial level for postwar Germany.

Nearly All Dismantled

British sources said they felt the Senate amendment came too late. "Of 222 plants in the British zone of Germany marked for dismantling only 30 were still untouched at the end of June," they said.

Britain is watching the slow progress of the Marshall fund bill through Congress with anxiety. But the delay has not added appreciable new economic problems.

"We are still receiving Marshall plan shipments and commitments are being made in anticipation of some aid from the new allocations," said one source.

Sofia Announces Appointment Of New Bulgarian Ministers

VASSILY KOLAROV
Gives up job . . .

Cabinet Changes Made Also But No Indication Given of Shake-Up

Sofia, Bulgaria, Aug. 6 (AP).—Bulgaria got a new foreign minister and minister of the interior tonight. Several cabinet changes were also announced.

Vassil Kolarov, who was named Premier on July 20 to succeed the late Georgi Dimitrov, resigned his old post as foreign minister. The new foreign minister is Valdimir Poptomov, editor in chief of the country's official Communist newspaper, Rabotnichesko Delo, and a member of the Politburo.

The ministry of the interior—the job that controls the police and internal security of the country—went to Russi Hristozov. He succeeds Anton Yugov, who remains as Deputy Premier.

(This dispatch from Sofia contained no speculation or mention that a cabinet shakeup was under way. There has been a consolidation of leadership in the Communist-led nations in Eastern Europe bringing to the fore men who are opposed to the so-called "Nationalist" viewpoint exemplified by Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia.)

Other changes as announced by the Government press department, included:

Vulko Chervenkov was succeeded as president of the Culture Committee by Karlo Lukanov. Chervenkov remains as Vice Premier.

Cyril Lazarov was named president of the State Planning Commission to succeed Dobri Terpsehev, who remains a Vice Premier.

Prof. Petko Kunin was named finance minister. He succeeds Prof. Ivan Stephanov.

Forbidden to Say Mass

Lyon, France, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—The Archbishop of Lyon today prohibited a Catholic priest, the Abbe Grainger, from saying mass because of his Communist activities. It was the second such case in France since the Vatican decree excommunicating Communists.

Poles Direct New Action At Catholics

London (Sunday), Aug. 7 (AP).—Communist-led Poland decreed penalties up to death today for anyone violating a citizen's "freedom of conscience." The action obviously was aimed at the Roman Catholic Church.

The Vatican ordered the excommunication of all militant Communists on July 13. Two weeks later the Polish government forbade Catholic priests from enforcing the Vatican decree and denounced it as an "act of aggression." The latest Polish action was seen as putting teeth into the enforcement order.

There were 17 articles in the decree passed by the Council of State and Ministers Council on Friday. PAP, the Polish press agency said the decree went into force today.

One article says: "He who misuses the freedom of creed by refusing to let another person participate in religious ceremonies because of political, social, or scientific activities or opinions is liable to imprisonment of up to five years."

The language of the articles did not single out priests or other Catholic church officials by name. Poland is predominantly Catholic.

The decree includes an article which provides:

"He who publicly insults, derides or humiliates a person or group of persons because of their creed, religious opinion or lack of religious affiliation is liable to imprisonment up to five years.

Czech Army Chief Pledges Aid to Russia

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Gen. Ludvik Svoboda, Minister of National Defense, has pledged Czech troops to fight on the side of Russia in event of war, the official news agency reported today.

Svoboda said Czechoslovakia would go to the aid of Russia "in case of need." He spoke at an army parade making the end of maneuvers in Slovakia.

He told the troops Czechoslovakia was modeling its army training program after that of the Soviet army "by whose side we had the honor to fight in the Second World War and by whose side in case of need we would fight again."

He said the maneuvers showed the Czech army has made "considerable progress" since the Communists took over the country in the coup of February, 1948. But he added it still had a long way to go.

Leopold Issue Balks Belgian Coalition Plan

Brussels, Belgium, Aug. 6 (AP).—The Socialist party, second largest in the country, said tonight it would not enter a three-party coalition government.

The announcement came after leaders of the three chief parties—Social Christians, Socialists and Liberals—had failed to break a 42-day cabinet crisis caused by a deadlock over the question of the return of King Leopold III to the throne.

"It would be useless to form a coalition government as long as agreement is not reached on the royal question," a Socialist announcement said.

As a consequence threat of another parliament breakup and new elections hung over the nation.

China Declaration Demanded

post-mortem on China must be a warning for the future.

He called for "a fresh look, unhampered by past prejudices or emotions."

"We cannot acquiesce in the results of aggression," Vandenberg said. "I do not for an instant believe that this aggression can permanently succeed and I would proceed on no such theory . . .

"The important thing is to find the facts, whether we like them or not, and deal with the realities; and to make it relentlessly clear that we have not abandoned either the people of China or freedom in the Far East."

Republican sources said Vandenberg may move to kill the nomination of W. Walton Butterworth, chief of the Department's Office of Far Eastern Affairs, as a new Assistant Secretary of State.

Taft Expects Fight

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, said he "expected" the Republicans would fight the Butterworth nomination although no policy decision had been made.

When President Truman named Butterworth in May, Vandenberg and other GOP leaders complained that as a long-time Far Eastern diplomat, Butterworth was "inevitably connected with tragic policy failures in China."

Vandenberg abstained from voting when the Foreign Relations Committee recommended approval of Butterworth, terming the appointment "a very great mistake in public policy" but praising him as a "most distinguished" career diplomat.

It was to head off Republican criticism that Secretary of State Dean Acheson recently named two nongovernmental consultants on Far East policy: Raymond B. Fosdick, president of the Rockefeller Foundation and Dr. Everett Case, President of Colgate University.

To Arrive Here Monday

Fosdick will arrive in Washington Monday and Dr. Case is expected the following week. Both men will work closely with Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup in evaluating new policy formulas for the containment of Communism in the Far East.

It was learned Fosdick and Dr. Case will not be limited to State Department reports but will be permitted to call in outside witnesses such as Lieut. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, whose report recommending a five-year program of assistance to the Chinese Nationalists was suppressed by the Administration until it came to light in the annexes of the White Paper.

Although Secretary Acheson would shut the door on any further aid to the Nationalist government, there is still the possibility of helping other non-Communist Chinese forces that may take up arms against Communist domination. But he has said repeatedly that the Chinese people are sick of war and would resent any efforts by the United States to encourage continued fighting.

The visit to Washington this week by President Elpidio Quirino of the Philippine Republic may provide an occasion for new talks on foreign policy in the Far East, State Department officials said.

Quirino will be the guest of President Truman at a dinner Monday night, and the guests will include Secretary of State Acheson.

Reports from the Philippines yesterday said President Quirino was understood to be ready to discuss the possibility of more military and economic aid for the Philippines to strengthen the republic against communism.

His visit, however, was arranged months ago and is not an outgrowth of any recent development in the Orient.

Japan Key to Asia Situation, General Says

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 6 (AP).—Japan is the key to the entire Far Eastern situation, the wartime commander of the Eighth Army said today.

"So long as Russia does not control the island chain, and particularly the main islands of Japan," said Lieut. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, "the further advancement of the Reds is to a very large extent stymied."

General Eichelberger spoke at the convention of the Ohio department of the American Legion.

". . . If we can make sure that the Japanese are reasonably able to protect themselves after a peace treaty is concluded," he continued, "the scales will be tipped the other way."

Eichelberger traced the means by which Russia has been able to spread communism over China.

"In the first place," he said, "in the course of our overwhelming victory over Japan, we also caused the surrender to the Reds of the Japanese army in Manchuria, estimated as high as one million troops.

"A second major factor has been the existent state of what we might call the 'war weariness' of the followers of Chiang Kai-shek.

"A third, though less tangible item, is to be seen in the ideological line—the usual story of promises—offered people by Communists. The fact is that with standards of living so low that any change is welcomed as an improvement, Asiatic peoples are wide open to communistic turmoil."

Aid Fund Bill Set for Swift Enactment

By The Associated Press

A multi-billion-dollar foreign aid bill was set yesterday for swift passage after days of sharp Senate debate. The final vote is expected Monday.

The only obstacle still confronting the money bill—and not a very big one—is an amendment by Senator Kem (R., Mo.) to bar recovery aid to any nation in the future which nationalizes a basic industry. The move is aimed particularly at Britain's socialization program.

Senate leaders see no difficulty ahead in brushing aside the Kem proposal. It was ruled out of order late Friday on the grounds it contained policy-making law in violation of Senate rules.

Kem appealed the decision by Senator Tydings (D., Md.), who was presiding. But leaders are confident they can beat this move.

Once past that hurdle, the Senate is expected to approve the measure. As it now stands, the bill contains:

$3,628,300,000 to carry the Economic Cooperation Administration to July 1, 1950.

150 million dollars for ECA loans.

$1,074,000,000 to pay for ECA operations during last April, May and June.

900 million dollars for Army occupation costs in Germany, Austria, Japan and the Ryukyu Islands.

45 million dollars in aid for Turkey and Greece.

$344,000 for a congressional watchdog committee staff to continue checking on foreign spending.

The total of these figures is roughly about 10 per cent less than voted by the House. For this reason, the final vote will send the bill into a conference where Senate-House members will work out their differences.

hearings with the Senate Armed Services Committee on the arms bill Monday, with Secretary of State Acheson scheduled as first witness. Later in the week, possibly Wednesday, the two committees will hear the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff on their return from their tour of Western Europe.

Kee said the House Foreign Affairs Committee would end its hearings Monday and begin consideration of the bill in executive session Tuesday with the goal of reporting it out by Thursday night. Kee said he was hopeful the committee would approve the full $1,450,000,000.

In commenting on the program Senator George said that unless the Administration persuades him that a greater amount is needed "immediately," he would urge a limitation of 700 million dollars "for all purposes and all countries."

Senator Tydings (D., Md.), chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said success or failure of the Administration in its quest for a $1,450,000,000 authorization would depend on ability of the military authorities to justify the program in detail.

"It's up to the chiefs of staff," he said, "to explain in terms of guns, tanks and planes the need for the full $1,450,000,000. I think Congress will give them what they say is necessary to carry out the best defense plan."

Douglas, Son Back After Iran Hike Stirs Russians

New York, Aug. 6 (AP).—Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas and his son came back to the United States today after a mountain-climbing jaunt that set off an official uproar inside Russia.

The Russian radio protested that Douglas was accompanied by "a gang of spies" as he and his 17-year-old son, William, jr., hiked through the mountains of Iran on Russia's southern borders.

"They dubbed me as 'the big devil from the United States,'" Douglas said, "and my son as 'the little devil.'".

Red Officials Refuse Ilse Koch Trial Aid

Bamberg, Germany, Aug. 6 (AP). Soviet zone authorities have declined to supply either witnesses or evidence for the German trial of Ilse Koch, former "Queen of Buchenwald" concentration camp, the Bavarian prosecutor's office said today.

A German court will try Mrs. Koch on charges of crimes against German prisoners in October, when she completes her present jail sentence imposed by an American war crimes court.

Paris, Aug. 6 (AP).—America's three top military men today completed their preliminary survey of western European defense needs, apparently optimistic but strictly noncommittal on their findings.

"We had most successful talks. There was great unanimity of opinion on almost all questions," Admiral Louis E. Denfeld, U. S. Chief of Naval Operations, told a news conference at the American Embassy here.

Denfeld stressed, however, that "no decisions were made" on key points of th future organization of North Atlantic Treaty countries against aggression.

Denfeld said the next Atlantic Pact discussions would be in Washington, but he declined to say when. He said they would be held on both political and military levels.

The naval chief spoke for himself, Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Army Chief of Staff, and Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Air Force chief. The three since last weekend have seen the military leaders of all nine western European members of the 12-nation Atlantic Pact, concluding today with the Netherlands, Belgium and Portugal.

Sunday they will fly to Vienna, but that trip is for inspection of American occupation forces. Austria is not a member of the pact.

The Americans gave no solid answers to a dozen or more questions by correspondents. Questions they parried included ones on where the Atlantic Pact organization will have headquarters and whether and where it will put up a defense line facing Soviet-dominated Eastern Europe.

How and when it will absorb the existing Brussels alliance of Britain, France, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg also went unanswered.

Denfeld even cast some doubt on whether the Atlantic Pact organization would be completed by the end of this year, as he had indicated earlier this week in London.

"That was just a date I picked up out of the air," he told the newsmen, "but I don't see any reason why it should not be done."

What military men in Europe have been asking is information on how much armament will be supplied to Europe by the United States for defense, when it will start coming, who is to get what types and what the defense strategy will be.

On these questions, Admiral Denfeld was careful to say that such points had not been discussed, or at least not decided.

A big question before most Europeans is whether a defense line would be established on the Elbe, in Central Germany, on the Rhine, or whether, in case of Russian attack, the whole of Europe would be given up with limited resistance and only Britain defended initially.

But questions on this went unanswered by Denfeld.

"There was no discussion of strategy," he said.

4th Anniversary In Hiroshima, Surveying Future

Hiroshima, Japan, Aug. 6 (AP).—The fourth anniversary of the first atom bombing was observed today with shattered Hiroshima's 30-year plan to make itself a model city for peaceful community living.

Mayor Shinzo Hamai told the city's survivors details of the plan after bells in the "peace tower" pealed in memory of the 78,000 who died in the blast.

The plan calls for rebuilding Hiroshima in three stages. During the first years little besides planning will be done. In the next 10 it is hoped to carry out the plans. By 1977 the city is to stand as a permanent monument to peace.

Europe Takes Step Toward Unity Monday

Strasbourg, France, Aug. 6 (U.P.). The first timid steps toward the age-old dream of a united Europe will be taken here Monday by statesmen of 10 western European nations.

The 10 foreign ministers and 87 deputies representing the parliaments of their countries will meet to found the first European parliament and the first European cabinet.

Their cautious experiment is to be known as the Council of Europe. It will only have power to debate and recommend.

The council's constitution was receiving final touches today in Paris by deputies of the 10 foreign ministers in a meeting at the French foreign office.

They represented the sponsoring nations: Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden.

They were expected to admit Greece and Turkey at their first session Monday. Austria, western Germany and perhaps Portugal may join later.

Only Switzerland among the western democracies has remained aloof. It fears that membership would infringe on its jealously guarded territorial neutrality.

The Council of Europe will be composed of two separate bodies. First is the cabinet, or council of ministers, which holds its first meeting in the ancient Strasbourg City Hall, Monday. It is made up of the foreign ministers of member states and is the real force of the organization.

The second body is the 87-member European Assembly, picked by the various national parliaments. It will have only advisory powers.

The assembly will hold its first meeting Wednesday in the Strasbourg University building and it is to meet once a year thereafter for not more than one month.

U. S. Court Jails Reds For Berlin Conspiracy

Berlin, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—A United States military government court today imposed jail sentences of six months to three years on eight Soviet agents, three of them women, for conspiring to kidnap Gerhard Schuett, an anti-Communist German resistance leader, from the American sector of Berlin.

Witnesses at the 14-day trial told of a plot by the German resistance group to blow up the Blue Express, Russian troop train running between Berlin and Moscow, and of a counterplot by Soviet zone secret police to murder the resistance leader.

Taylor Gets Top Army Job In Berlin

Berlin, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Maj. Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, United States Deputy European Chief of Staff, today was named American commander in Berlin with the task of unifying the United States position there. He succeeded Brig. Gen. Frank L. Howley.

Taylor, wartime paratroop commander, will have charge of both the Berlin military government and United States troops in the city. Howley was responsible only for military government. The troops previously were commanded by Col. J. T. Duke.

Taylor will take over command at a date to be announced later. Howley asked to be relieved by September 7. The Philadelphian plans to return to private life as a member of an advertising firm.

The appointment of Taylor carried out the promise of United States High Commissioner John J. McLoy that the job would go to a senior officer "whose standing would clearly represent an indication of the importance which the United States attaches to the preservation of the freedom and welfare of the city."

Adm. Ewen Takes Over

Guam, Aug. 6 (AP).—Rear Adm. E. C. Ewen of Portsmouth, N. H., took over today as commander of United States Naval Forces in the Marianas, succeeding Rear Adm. Charles A. Pownall. Pownall will continue as Governor of Guam until September 1, when he will be relieved by a civilian appointee.

Long-Term West Berlin Loan Urged

Berlin, Aug. 6 (AP).—Allied military leaders here have recommended an immediate long-term loan to save West Berlin from economic disaster, official American sources said today.

The three western commanders forwarded a request for a grant of 455 million west marks $136,500,000) to the United States, British and French military governors three days ago, these sources said. It has not yet been acted upon.

The commanders told the governmental chiefs "if they are to survive," West Berlin's industries require immediate long-term credits.

West Berlin lost 80 per cent of its industrial tools and equipment as a result of the war, the Allied commanders reported. Out of a total population of 2,200,000 some 209,000 workers now are drawing either full or partial unemployment relief.

Named Assistant Army Secretary

ARCHIBALD S. ALEXANDER telephones Washington from Bernardsville, N. J., to confirm the report that President Truman nominated him Friday to be Assistant Secretary of the Army. His smile indicates the answer

By C. B. Allen
NYHT News Service

It is no secret, military or otherwise, that the Administration's new bill to "make unification more effective" had a "rough time" on Capitol Hill before it passed the final hurdle of the House this week.

It was made equally clear, in hearings before the House Armed Services Committee and elsewhere, that what some legislators term the "inept and roughshod" tactics of Defense Secretary Louis Johnson were largely responsible for this situation—and for the delays that beset the measure.

It was also made progressively plainer, from exchanges between members of the committee and the Secretary of Defense during his public testimony, that distrust of Johnson's methods and motives lay at the bottom of its reluctance to give him the increased powers he will hold as soon as President Truman signs the bill. This became so obvious in the hearings as to prompt hasty and polite reassurances "for the record" that "we are talking, of course, about the office and not the man."

Shown by Rebellion

No better example of this feeling can be found than the committee's successful rebellion against its chairman, Representative Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), on July 12, when it voted to shelve the unification bill pending completion of its scheduled investigation into B-36 bomber procurement.

This action was precipitated by charges that Secretary Johnson was attempting to screen all testimony which might be given by his Army, Navy and Air Force subordinates about the B-36 issue; that he was, in effect, trying to "censor" their opinion on a matter in which he stands among those accused of improper conduct.

Despite the fact that he had denied these allegations of wrongdoing and "welcomed" the investigation, the committee insisted that no further steps be taken to increase the powers of a man, charged with abuse of the power already in his hands, until he had cleared himself of that charge.

Short Rescues Bill

It took a lot of legislative maneuvering and political jockeying to circumvent the unification road block created by the committee's action. Ironically, it was the committee's minority leader, Representative Dewey Short (R., Mo.), who led the way out of this impasse—although it had been his irate motion that shelved the bill "until Secretary Johnson clears his name."

Short immediately embodied the noncontroversial budgeting and accounting reform provisions of the unification measure into an entirely new bill and started it through the legislative mill. This subsequently came out ready for President Truman's signature, as substantially the same measure which, theoretically, is still "stuck" in the House Armed Services committee.

The battle-wise Georgian whose committee had voted down his contention that the B-36 issue had "no relationship" to the merits of the unification bill, called at the White House in company with Secretary Johnson. Thereafter, with a gleam of belated but triumphant satisfaction in his eye, he served notice on the committee—and the House—that President Truman was ready to reorganize the National Military Establishment by executive order if Congress didn't do it by legislation, as Mr. Truman had requested in a special message last March.

Finally Approved

The presidential reorganization plan went to Congress on July 18, the same day the House passed Representative Short's new bill by unanimous consent and passed it along to the Senate.

Senator Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) tacked the Short bill onto the Senate's original version of the unification measure—the very one that had been "sidetracked" by Mr. Vinson's committee—and got it passed unanimously by the Senate. Thereafter it went to a joint Senate-House conference committee headed by Senator Tydings and Representative Vinson where, oddly enough, it picked up some of the "refinements" shelved by the House committee and finally was approved in its "compromise" form by both Houses of Congress.

The opening paragraph of the new bill states "the intent of Congress" in enacting it is to have the Army, Navy and Air Force "separately administered" and not interfered with in "their assigned combat and service components." It does call for the "authoritative coordination and unified direction" by the Secretary of Defense but it specifically directs that he is "not to merge them."

Navy Officer Elected by Reservists

Comdr. John Bracken, USNR, 37-year-old lawyer of 2500 Q st. nw., recently became the first naval officer to head the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

Bracken

Commander Bracken's election to succeed Army Col. Clarence Barnes of Guthrie, Okla., followed the merger of the Reserve Officers of the Naval Services with the ROAUS, an older group made up mostly of Army and Air Force officers.

Members of the association, whose offices are at 2517 Connecticut ave. nw., reelected Lieut. Col. Thomas H. King of 5024 Bradley blvd., Chevy Chase, Md., as judge advocate.

A graduate of the University of Pittsburgh, Commander Bracken received his law degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He entered the Navy in 1940, served in the Coral Sea engagements, and commanded a destroyer in the Philippine Seas, Iwo Jima and Okinawa campaigns.

He later became a member of the staff of Justice Robert H. Jackson in the Nuernberg war guilt trials. He came from there to Washington.

Senate Seat Declined by Hoover

New York, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—It was learned today that Herbert Hoover, the only living former President of the United States, recently had been offered but turned down the honor of serving as New York's interim Senator.

When Robert F. Wagner (D.,) resigned because of illness, Governor Dewey offered the seat to Mr. Hoover, who maintains a residence in New York City's Waldorf Towers. Although he has long believed the Constitution should be amended to provide all former Presidents with a Senate seat, Mr. Hoover refused the offer.

The appointment tendered by Dewey was good only until a special election to be held in New York next November. Mr. Hoover indicated to friends he might have taken the job if it had been for a longer term. John Foster Dulles was named to fill the Senate vacancy.

Maragon Call to White House Linked to U. S. Contract

check the facts with me first" and he said "they have continued the same tactics ever since."

After Hunt's first statement on June 26, the newspaper said it repeatedly invited him to tell his side of the story.

He declared that although the Senate group has had "two attorneys and 16 investigators going over my affairs for more than six weeks, that have not even suggested that anything has been found which would warrant any charge against me."

Hunt, a former Army officer who lists himself as a management counselor was named in the Herald Tribune as the recipient of a $1000 fee to help Paul Grindle, a Massachusetts manufacturer, get a Government contract.

The story went on to quote Grindle as saying Hunt was also to get 5 per cent of any Government job he helped secure.

Grindle said Hunt implied he had considerable influence in Washington. Hunt retorted he never tried to trade on influence and none of the people he knows in Government are subject to influence.

Hoey's special Senate Investigating Subcommittee is scheduled to open public hearings Monday with Secretary of Defense Johnson as first witness.

As a result of the subcommittee's preliminary investigations, Secretary of the Army Gray has suspended two major generals—Alden H. Waitt, chief of the Chemical Corps, and Herman Feldman, the Quartermaster General. In relieving them from duty temporarily, Gray said they had failed to exhibit judgment "expected of persons in their position."

Generals Likely to Testify

Both Waitt and Feldman, as well as Maragon, are expected to testify in the public inquiry.

Maragon, once a Kansas City bootblack, knows his way around the White House and calls many Government officials by their first names. He has been questioned by the committee privately.

The subcommittee yesterday questioned in private three officials of Austin Metal Products, Inc., a Detroit firm which manufactured automotive parts. Today Hoey said:

"In addition to the Detroit men, we have examined other contractors about relations with John Maragon. Some of them have testified they sought Maragon's help in getting Government contracts.

"Some of them also have admitted that Maragon made White House contracts for them, but in some instances helped them deal directly with Government departments."

At Friday's session, the subcommittee heard Nichols K. P'Sachos, described by Hoey as "the most important member" of the Detroit firm; Edgar Roger Snyder, vice president and general sales manager, and Harold Freedman, treasurer.

Mundt, a member of the subcommittee, gave this summary of what they had to say:

"They testified they got in touch with Maragon to see whether he could speed up the contract.

"They said Maragon called someone at the White House and got them an appointment with an Army officer who appeared to be an assistant to General Vaughan."

(Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan is President Truman's military aide. Maragon has said he and Vaughan are good friends. Vaughan has declined to comment on the 5 per center inquiry, except to say he knows about 300 persons in Washington contract operations.)

"They said," Mundt went on, "that they discussed the contract with this Army officer, and that the whole thing had been cleared up and the contract released by the time they got back to Detroit."

Hoey has said the Detroiters were "clearly entitled" to the contract they got for a supply of windshields, since they were low bidders, and that they were seeking only to speed up final Government approval.

He has said also the evidence indicates Maragon was not paid anything by the trio and that "the whole thing apparently was on a basis of friendship."

Although the subcommittee has called Grindle to follow Johnson to the witness stand Monday, it is not sure whether Hunt will be able to appear any time soon because he is hospitalized as a result of an operation for a blood clot on his leg.

FBI Check Proposal Horrifies Scientists

By the United Press

The Atomic Energy Commission said yesterday that nine distinguished scientists on its general advisory committee are "horrified" at the idea of requiring FBI checks on Government fellowship applicants.

The Senate has approved a rider on the commission's money bill for the current fiscal year banning fellowships to Communists and requiring an FBI investigation of all applicants.

The ban, which has not yet been acted on by the House, grew out of the discovery earlier this year that an avowed Communist student at the University of North Carolina had been awarded one of the Atomic Commission's fellowships for nonsecret science study.

The commission made public a statement drafted by its general advisory committee last June 6, at the height of the congressional furore over the student.

Registers Strong Disapproval

The committee, headed by Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, director of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., registered its "strong disapproval" of any move toward FBI investigations of youths studying nonsecret subjects with Government aid.

Holding that FBI checks are "both unwise and unnecessary," the committee said:

"We are horrified by the prospects of moving this semipolice apparatus into the realm of youth.

"We believe that the reputation of many young people might be impaired by rumors growing out of such a system of investigation of prospective fellowship holders.

Different Reaction Likely

"Older people can see in proper perspective calls from FBI agents; they can answer questions about acquaintances without feeling that the man being investigated is under suspicion. But young people of university age are likely to react quite differently. An atmosphere of suspicion and uncertainty is likely to be generated . . . in colleges, universities and local communities."

The committee said that even though "an occasional clandestine member of the Communist Party" might be able to wangle a fellowship, in the absence of FBI checks, no damage would be done to national security because he would not have access to secret information.

Byrd Denies Charges of Private Profit

By The Associated Press

Senator Byrd (D., Va.), yesterday charged the CIO Political Action Committee with "outright lies" and an attack on his personal affairs.

He said in a statement that CIO circulars "charged that, as an apple grower, I was selling my apples to the Federal Government at high and exorbitant prices."

Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC, told a reporter his organization did not participate in the Virginia primary campaign. He added that it did not circulate any pamphlets in connection with the election.

It was also charged, he added, that he "was obtaining large sums from the Federal Government under the conservation programs" and that he "was buying fertilizer from the Government at half price."

Byrd said it was also charged 'League Reporter', the official organ of 'Labor's League for Political Action', published in Washington under the date of August 1—the day before the primary in Virginia—carried similar false charges under the headline: 'Byrd would pare budget but likes aid for apples'."

"With respect to the lies about my private business," Byrd added, "which these labor propagandists have spewed all over Virginia, and generally broadcast elsewhere, the truth is:

"I have never received a check or money in any other form from the United States Government in the 16 years I have been in the Senate, except my salary as a United States Senator.

"In the 14 years I served in the government of Virginia, I never received a check or money in any other form from the government except my salary check.

"I have never sold any apples to the Federal Government, and I have never sold anything else to Federal Government for any consideration.

"I have never purchased my fertilizer from the Government at half price or any other price.

"I have never accepted soil conservation payments, and I have never accepted any remuneration for participation in any Government program.

Alexandria Unit To Decide Monday On City Manager

Alexandria's quest for a permanent city manager may be ended Tuesday night, it was indicated yesterday.

A special city council committee, which has narrowed a list of 30 applicants down to 2 qualified candidates, will meet Monday night. The group expects to recommend one of the two men for the job. If the decision is made, committee chairman R. Samuel Luckett said the recommendation will be submitted to the council for action at its Tuesday night meeting.

Drowned Man's Body Tentatively Identified Here

The body of a man about 50 years old, tentatively identified by police as Mitchell Holmes, or Holmes Mitchell, was recovered from the Georgetown channel yesterday opposite Fletcher's Boathouse in the 4900 block of Canal rd. nw.

Homicide squad detectives said they found $23 in the man's pockets along with a bricklayers' and plasterers' union card, from which they deduced the victim's identity. Police hope to establish positive identification when union offices open Monday.

The victim, police said, had rented a boat at 9 p. m. Friday to go fishing. When the rented boat was found floating empty yesterday morning, Harbor police started dragging and recovered the body.

Iowa GOP Asks Spangler to Resign

Clear Lake, Iowa, Aug. 6 (U.P.)—The Republican State Central Committee today asked Harrison E. Spangler to resign as GOP National Committeeman from Iowa. No reason was given.

The committee voted to ask the former National Republican Chairman "forthwith" to resign.

Spangler of Cedar Rapids has been under fire from some segments of the party for some time for being "out of tune" with new trends in party policy.

Father Chides Rep. Jacobs on School Aid

Cannelton, Ind., Aug. 6 (AP).—Representative Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.), of Indianapolis, has received a parental dressing down for opposing the use of Federal funds to aid parochial schools.

His 81-year-old father, Mike Jacobs, of Troy, Ind., wrote a letter to the editor of the weekly Cannelton News in which he said:

"I am sorry my poor dear boy, Andrew Jacobs, Congressman from the eleventh District, takes such a stand against Catholic education getting some of the Federal funds now proposed for education.

"The Catholic capitalists pay a vast amount in taxes for education, and it would be no more than fair that the parochial schools should get a little from these funds.

"Those who oppose Catholic education getting this Federal aid certainly do not appreciate the fight the Catholic Church is making against Communism. There is no other organization in the United States making as hard and successful a fight against Communism and enemies of our country."

Informed in Washington of his father's letter, Representative Jacobs said he hadn't changed his mind.

"My father, my brothers and our family have disagreed many times, but we still maintain a deep family respect. I regret that my father disagrees with me on this issue, but I still think I'm right."

The elder Jacobs promised a fatherly lecture when he sees his Congressman son.

"I've never talked to Andrew about this thing, but I think he's wrong, and I'm going to give him a good talking to when I see him," the Congressman's father said.

Both are members of the Roman Catholic Church. The Elder Jacobs said his letter was prompted by his son's support of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. She was criticized recently by Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York for her opposition to use of Federal funds for church schools.

Meat Price Slash Predicted in Fall

By the United Press

Meat will be cheaper this fall, the Agriculture Department said today.

The price drop, it said, will be "much sharper" for pork-on-the-hoof than for other meat animals.

In a review of the livestock situation, the department said hog prices may drop so low in the fall or winter that the Government at some point will have to buy pork to hold hog prices at the support level required by law.

Production boosts will cause other meat prices to drop, too, the department said, but not as much as pork.

The department predicted a decline in hog prices soon after farmers start marketing the record-high peacetime pig crop born last spring. Marketings may start in September, but are not expected to reach a large volume until October.

In the meantime, the department said, prices may hold at present levels.

Hogs recently have been selling in Chicago at $20 to $22 per 100 pounds for good and choice barrows and gilts. The department noted that the support price for these hogs at Chicago this fall will vary seasonally from $18.50 in September to perhaps less than $15 in December.

The big increase in pork output stems from the record high corn crop last year.

This year's crops are expected to boost feed supplies for meat animals to a new all-time record, the department said, indicating a further boost in meat output next year.

Missouri Pacific

Fact-Finders Fail to Settle Rail Row

A Presidential fact-finding board yesterday reported failure in its efforts to settle a threatened strike by four operating brotherhoods against the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

The board told the White House that if the unions strike, "the general adoption" of their policy in this case "would soon result in the complete nullification of the Railway Labor Act."

Several previous panels, the board noted, issued similar warnings about "a bad washout on the track" in collective bargaining relations between the operating railroad unions and the carriers.

Under the Railway Labor Act, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen will be free to strike the Missouri Pacific in 30 days.

The National Mediation Board is expected, however, to make a further attempt to get the parties to accept the fact-finding report as a basis for working out an agreement.

The unions called the strike to force settlement of 300 grievances over assignment of work, overtime pay and other working rules. The cases have been pending before the Railroad Adjustment Board in Chicago.

Union Signs Contract For $3.08 Wage Cut

Miami, Okla., Aug. 6 (AP).—Union employes and officials of the Eagle-Picher Mining and Smelting Co. last night signed a new contract which includes a daily wage cut of $3.08 a man.

The salary cut affects 825 members of the AFL United Cement, Line and Gypsom Workers in Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

The contract also provides a sliding wage scale based on the price of zinc concentrates.

Employes walked out June 30 when a contract could not be agreed on. Company officials said the mines will open Monday.

Wages before the shutdown ranged from $1 an hour for some miners to $1.38½ cents for machine men. Under the new contract, top paid men will receive $1.08 an hour with the lowest getting 84 cents.

Choctaw Indians Claim Uncle Sam Hoodwinked Them

Neshoba, Miss., Aug. 6 (AP).—Mississippi's Choctaw Indians say Uncle Sam hoodwinked their ancestors in land grants. They want about 40 million dollars to make things right.

Chief Joe Chitto of Standing Pine, Miss., leader of the 2500 Choctaws, yesterday told his plans for taking the case to Washington. He hired Attorney W. T. Weir to do the big talking.

Chitto contends the tribe's ancestors were promised lands in the treaties of 1786, 1820 and 1930, of which they got only part, and then after much trouble. His braves don't want the land now, just cash.

Weir, said about 16 million acres were involved in the Choctaw claim.

The lawyer said the Choctaw case was based on claims their ancestors could not read or write and did not understand the treaty terms.

New Model Autos—Old Model Designs—Show Soon

Detroit, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Sleek 1950 model automobiles start to make their debuts this month.

Leading the fall parade will be Buick and Studebaker, followed by at least one other independent maker next month.

Early arrivals may tell the tale of price tags which may or may not give the customer a break.

One of the surer bets is that 1950 designs will consist mostly of face liftings of 1949 editions, at least among the lowest priced cars. Auto makers spent huge sums on expensive dies last year.

Buick is slated to bring out a new special series with a price tag to tempt the low-price car buyer.

Studebaker, the original post-war style pacesetter, was one of three major makers which didn't fall in line with the price cut parade kicked off by General Motors. However, acceptance of the 1949 Studebaker has kept it at the top of the heap in sales among independents.

The talk is that Chrysler has design changes in the offing, probably in late fall, depending on how sales hold up on present models.

General Motors hasn't said so, but all its new lines should be introduced by the late Christmas holidays. Tipoff is that GM has scheduled its automotive show in New York in January.

New Fords, Lincolns and Mercuries also are expected to make debuts this fall. Ford and Mercury changes aren't expected to be radical from present design.

Franco's Aides Deny Reports of Accident

San Sebastian, Spain, Aug. 6 (AP).—Personal aides of Generalissimo Francisco Franco today denied all reports that the Spanish leader had met with some sort of an accident.

They said he is in fine shape and had ordered his private yacht Azor to stand ready again today to take him on his daily fishing trip. Franco has gone fishing every day since he began his vacation here July 29, they said.

Wisconsin's Rent Control Law Assailed

Madison, Wis., Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Opponents of a new Wisconsin law which wipes out Federal control over rents claimed victory today in the first step of a court battle against the legislation.

Some tenants meanwhile reported they have begun receiving notices of higher rents under the State law which permits 15 to 30 per cent rent increases.

Federal Judge Robert Tehan ordered the Milwaukee Federal rent director to show cause why he should not be stopped from turning over his records to State authorities for use in administering the new act.

The order was requested by the Wisconsin CIO. The CIO lawyers said the new State regulations "are no control at all" and they held that the local option section of the Federal rent law is unconstitutional, a ruling already made by a Federal judge in Chicago.

Tehan set the hearing on the restraining order for August 15.

The Wisconsin law calls for total decontrol next June. In the meantime, communities may remove controls if the Governor approves their request.

Boy Hospitalized With Japanese Beetle in Ear

A 3½-year-old boy was hospitalized when a Japanese beetle flew in his ear last week, while two other children required medical attention after drinking a home permanent wave solution.

These were among 114 home accident injuries reported by the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service. Two falls resulted in fatalities.

The breakdown of injuries listed 39 falls, 3 burns, 8 accidental poisonings, 12 foreign bodies, 31 cuts, 2 bruises and 14 miscellaneous happenings.

Liquids downed by youngsters included kerosene, iodine, turpentine as well as the permanent wave set. Alcohol was imbibed mistakenly by a young woman and a 2-year-old swallowed a giant dose of 15 cathartic pills.

A 2-year-old boy threw his 3-month-old sister to the floor while his mother's back was turned, in another home mishap.

Publisher Freed On $150,000 Bail in Alienation Suit

Woodstock, Vt., Aug. 6 (U.P.).—William Loeb, publisher of the New Hampshire Sunday News and several other papers, was released from Windsor County jail late today after providing $150,000 bail in an alienation of affections suit.

He was accused by George Gallowhur of alienating the affections of his wife, a grand-daughter of E. W. Scripps.

The damage suit was for $150,000—the same amout as the bail.

Loeb, a native of Washington, D. C., was married two years ago to socialite Eleanor McAllister of New York. They have a two-month-old daughter.

system known as the Aiken Law, due to take effect in 1950, and makes no provision for any farmer subsidies.

Brannan has suggested that market prices of meats, fresh fruits and vegetables and other perishable farm products be allowed to reach their own levels without Government supports. This would aid consumers, he said, while farmers could collect "production payments" or subsidies if required to maintain their income at a level established by the Government as fair.

"Secretary Brannan did not think we gave him much of a field to operate," Anderson said. "He said it was so limited it would apply to only a few products—largely a few vegetables."

Even this might cause controversy and delay, Anderson quoted Brannan, so "it might be better to leave it out completely."

Anderson's group made at least one concession. They had banned "production payments" on any commodity if the estimated loss would amount to 10 per cent of the income farmers received from that product the previous year. That was stricken.

But a long list of other restrictions on the "production payments" were retained.

Meat Price Slash Predicted in Fall

By the United Press

Meat will be cheaper this fall, the Agriculture Department said today.

The price drop, it said, will be "much sharper" for pork-on-the-hoof than for other meat animals.

In a review of the livestock situation, the department said hog prices may drop so low in the fall or winter that the Government at some point will have to buy pork to hold hog prices at the support level required by law.

Production boosts will cause other meat prices to drop, too, the department said, but not as much as pork.

The department predicted a decline in hog prices soon after farmers start marketing the record-high peacetime pig crop born last spring. Marketings may start in September, but are not expected to reach a large volume until October.

In the meantime, the department said, prices may hold at present levels.

Hogs recently have been selling in Chicago at $20 to $22 per 100 pounds for good and choice barrows and gilts. The department noted that the support price for these hogs at Chicago this fall will vary seasonally from $18.50 in September to perhaps less than $15 in December.

The big increase in pork output stems from the record high corn crop last year.

This year's crops are expected to boost feed supplies for meat animals to a new all-time record, the department said, indicating a further boost in meat output next year.

Missouri Pacific

Fact-Finders Fail to Settle Rail Row

A Presidential fact-finding board yesterday reported failure in its efforts to settle a threatened strike by four operating brotherhoods against the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

The board told the White House that if the unions strike, "the general adoption" of their policy in this case "would soon result in the complete nullification of the Railway Labor Act."

Several previous panels, the board noted, issued similar warnings about "a bad washout on the track" in collective bargaining relations between the operating railroad unions and the carriers.

Under the Railway Labor Act, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen will be free to strike the Missouri Pacific in 30 days.

The National Mediation Board is expected, however, to make a further attempt to get the parties to accept the fact-finding report as a basis for working out an agreement.

The unions called the strike to force settlement of 300 grievances over assignment of work, overtime pay and other working rules. The cases have been pending before the Railroad Adjustment Board in Chicago.

Union Signs Contract For $3.08 Wage Cut

Miami, Okla., Aug. 6 (AP).—Union employes and officials of the Eagle-Picher Mining and Smelting Co. last night signed a new contract which includes a daily wage cut of $3.08 a man.

The salary cut affects 825 members of the AFL United Cement, Line and Gypsom Workers in Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

The contract also provides a sliding wage scale based on the price of zinc concentrates.

Employes walked out June 30 when a contract could not be agreed on. Company officials said the mines will open Monday.

Wages before the shutdown ranged from $1 an hour for some miners to $1.38½ cents for machine men. Under the new contract, top paid men will receive $1.08 an hour with the lowest getting 84 cents.

Choctaw Indians Claim Uncle Sam Hoodwinked Them

Neshoba, Miss., Aug. 6 (AP).—Mississippi's Choctaw Indians say Uncle Sam hoodwinked their ancestors in land grants. They want about 40 million dollars to make things right.

Chief Joe Chitto of Standing Pine, Miss., leader of the 2500 Choctaws, yesterday told his plans for taking the case to Washington. He hired Attorney W. T. Weir to do the big talking.

Chitto contends the tribe's ancestors were promised lands in the treaties of 1786, 1820 and 1930, of which they got only part, and then after much trouble. His braves don't want the land now, just cash.

Weir, said about 16 million acres were involved in the Choctaw claim.

The lawyer said the Choctaw case was based on claims their ancestors could not read or write and did not understand the treaty terms.

New Model Autos—Old Model Designs—Show Soon

Detroit, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Sleek 1950 model automobiles start to make their debuts this month.

Leading the fall parade will be Buick and Studebaker, followed by at least one other independent maker next month.

Early arrivals may tell the tale of price tags which may or may not give the customer a break.

One of the surer bets is that 1950 designs will consist mostly of face liftings of 1949 editions, at least among the lowest priced cars. Auto makers spent huge sums on expensive dies last year.

Buick is slated to bring out a new special series with a price tag to tempt the low-price car buyer.

Studebaker, the original post-war style pacesetter, was one of three major makers which didn't fall in line with the price cut parade kicked off by General Motors. However, acceptance of the 1949 Studebaker has kept it at the top of the heap in sales among independents.

The talk is that Chrysler has design changes in the offing, probably in late fall, depending on how sales hold up on present models.

General Motors hasn't said so, but all its new lines should be introduced by the late Christmas holidays. Tipoff is that GM has scheduled its automotive show in New York in January.

New Fords, Lincolns and Mercuries also are expected to make debuts this fall. Ford and Mercury changes aren't expected to be radical from present design.

Franco's Aides Deny Reports of Accident

San Sebastian, Spain, Aug. 6 (AP). Personal aides of Generalissimo Francisco Franco today denied all reports that the Spanish leader had met with some sort of an accident.

They said he is in fine shape and had ordered his private yacht Azor to stand ready again today to take him on his daily fishing trip. Franco has gone fishing every day since he began his vacation here July 29, they said.

2800 Reported Dead in Quakes

with fleeing human columns. Many fell by the roadside exhausted. Plazas and parks were jammed.

Because of the fear of epidemics, bodies were buried as fast as possible in huge trenches. Others were cremated.

Special Civil Guard platoons kept looters from the ruins, with orders to shoot on sight.

Ambato was without electricity and all rescue work, including emergency surgical operations, was carried out by lantern light.

New York-born President Galo Plaza Lasso assumed personal command of relief operations. He set his headquarters in an army tent in the main Ambato Plaza, with a staff of 200 doctors and scores of nurses and aides.

Railway officials said the Quito-Guayaquil line was blocked by so many landslides it will take a week to reopen it. Twenty-seven slides were reported on one 3-mile stretch of track. This line, principal freight carrier between Quito and the Pacific Coast, passes through the entire earthquake zone.

The earthquake struck a wide mountainous area of the Andes range surrounding Ambato, 55 miles due south of Quito. The cities of Latacunga, Guaranda and Riobamba also were hit. The Governor of Chimboranzo Province reported there were numerous dead and many injured in Riobamba, the provincial capital. This city, with 60,000 inhabitants, is 100 miles south of Quito.

Towns and villages suffering major damage included: San Miguel, Pujili, Cevallos, San Andres, Mocha, Cochimabma, Guamote and Guano. The latter, famous for its Indian rugs, was reported almost destroyed with an undetermined number of dead and injured. The towns of Salcedo and Santa Rosa also were reported to have been damaged.

Amato, which was destroyed by an earthquake in 1707, again was a scene of desolation. When the first shock rocked the city, many residents dashed into streets and parks for safety. Hundreds took refuge in churches and prayed. Great cracks opened in the streets. Water mains burst and communication lines were ripped apart. Bridges crumbled into bits. Nearly the whole population was left homeless.

The cathedral was destroyed while 50 children were inside taking a catechism lesson. The military barracks crashed to the ground, killing 150 soldiers and injuring 60 others. The palace of the provincial government was a heap of ruins. Four other churches also were demolished—Santo Domingo, San Francisco, La Merced and the Church of the Josephine Fathers.

Authorities ordered everyone out of all buildings to avoid injury from falling walls. Survivors spent last night in tents. Army demolition squads were called to raze hazardous structures.

Military relief planes sent to Ambato from Quito were forced to turn back this morning when fog shrouded the stricken city. Others took off later carrying blood plasma and vaccines distributed by the Red Cross.

Relief trains were standing ready to move toward the scene as soon as test locomotives determined whether the line was safe. A train was derailed in one area, and refugees from Santa Rosa arriving in Quito reported their town was almost wiped out.

Ambato was founded in 1794. The earthquake that destroyed it in 1797 also laid waste the towns of Quero, Pelifeo, Pillaro and Patate. In that catastrophe 5908 persons were killed.

(Basil O'Connor, president of the American National Red Cross, cabled the Red Cross Society of Ecuador that medical supplies and food will be sent to the stricken area if needed.)

Georgetown Records Three Earth Shocks

The seismograph at Georgetown here recorded two distinct shocks at 2:10:33 p. m., EDT, and 2:16:23 p. m. Friday. Edward Powers, the seismologist, said a third shock recorded at 7:49:46 p. m. apparently was much farther away than the Ecuadorean quakes.

District's Total of 'Gaffers' Up

The number of people over 65 in the District increased in excess of 12,000 in the past eight years, but showed a decline in their ratio to the total population for the period.

The Institute of Life Insurance yesterday issued figures compiled by the Social Security Board showing in 1940, 40,856 persons over 65 or about six per cent of the total population in the District, and in 1948, 53,251, only 5.9 per cent of the population.

For the Nation as a whole, the total number of persons 65 or over increased from nine million in 1940, or 6.8 per cent of the population, to 10,900,000 in 1948, or 7.5 of the population, the report stated.

Democrats In Harmony On Patronage

By The Associated Press

House Democrats disclosed yesterday that a quiet party pow-wow, with the White House represented, had brought informed agreement on vexing patronage problems and campaign financing.

Some Administration critics were pictured as gratified. Democrats talked confidently of picking up at least 20 more seats in next year's election as a result of the "understandings."

The agreement was discussed at a supposedly secret meeting a few nights ago in the caucus room of the Old House Office Building.

Those attending were (1) members of the Democratic Congressional Committee, (2) representatives of the Democratic National Committee, and (3) Matt Connelly presidential secretary and one of Mr. Truman's right-hand men.

The congressional committee is composed of one Democrat from each State having a Democrat in the House. Its job is to look after the party's interests in House elections every two years. Representative Mike Kirwan of Ohio is chairman of the group.

Democrats already have 261 House seats against 172 for the combined political opposition.

It was agreed, members disclosed, that from now on the individual members of Congress interested will be consulted when party patronage is dispensed and the congressional committee will have more say about who gets financial help and how much.

The patronage agreement does not apply to major presidential appointees but affects so-called minor plums. In the past there has been ill-feeling because some of these posts were passed out without prior consultation with the Democratic House member in whose district the appointee resided.

"There have been cases in which people have been appointed to jobs who were political foes of the House member from the district," one Democrat said. "This won't happen anymore."

On finances, the congressional committee in the past has raised and dispensed finances independently in House elections. Hereafter, informants said, there may be some money aid from the National Committee and it will be channeled through the congressional committee.

The new agreement pleases even some of the Southern States-Righters who attended.

"We are not going to have any trouble over patronage or finances in the future," one Southerner said. "We are going to pull together to keep the Democratic Party in control of the House next year. Good Democrats will be taken care of. And all Democrats are good Democrats."

Bible Reading, Prayer in Public Schools Attacked

Augusta, Me., Aug. 6 (U.P.).—A petition challenging the csontitutionality of Bible reading and reciting the Lord's Prayer in State public schools was filed with the Maine Supreme Court today.

The petition demanded that the Supreme Court issue an order against the State to outlaw a 1923 statute calling upon teachers to read certain passages of the Bible to their children and have them say prayers daily.

Frank C. Hughes, 67, of Squirrel Island, a childless, retired Glendive (Mont.) municipal judge, and six other persons signed the petition. Justice Robert B. Williamson ordered a preliminary hearing August 18.

Hughes, a self-styled atheist, said the case would be "fought to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary" and that the petitioners had the financial backing of the Liberal League of New York City, which he described as an organization "devoted to maintaining separation of church and state."

Flood in Manhattan

New York, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—A 36-inch water main at the site of the Old Tombs prison in downtown Manhattan burst early today, flooding a three-block area to a depth of 3 feet, halting East Side subway service, cutting off water supplies and setting off burglar alarms.

Ex-Husband, Lover Of Divorcee Die

Southampton, N. Y., Aug. 6 (AP). The former husband of an attractive red-haired divorcee was found shot to death today after a town policeman of this fashionable summer resort was shot and killed in the divorcee's arms.

State police said Frank Zieman, 44, apparently shot himself with a .22-caliber rifle as he sat in his car in Bridgehampton, 10 miles from here. There was a bullet wound in his right temple and a rifle between his knees.

Nine hours earlier, Policeman Harold Winters, 44, was killed by a single .22-caliber shot fired through an open kitchen window at the home of Zieman's divorced wife, Mary, 40.

He and Mrs. Zieman were kissing goodby before he went back to patrol duty when the bullet crashed into the back of his head, police said. He slumped to the floor, dead.

Mrs. Zieman called police who set up road blocks and started a hunt for Zieman. Police said they had been informed Zieman told friends recently that he planned to kill Winters, his former wife and himself.

Mrs. Zieman divorced her husband in Florida last winter. Winters also was divorced recently. His former wife and their three children now live in Southold, N. Y.

Zieman recently returned from duty as a Navy civilian employe in the Pacific.

In a statement to police Mrs. Zieman said she and Winters were not married, contrary to earlier reports.

Arrives to Wed Ailing Veteran

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

FROM GERMANY—Ly Elise Broeckmann, of Ober-Ramstadt, Germany, is photographed at La Guardia Airport, New York, where she came by plane to marry Charles Eller, of Fresno, Calif. Her fiance, who met her while serving with the American Army, has been ill with pneumonia and tuberculosis, and when he was returned to the United States it was discovered that Miss Broeckmann had missed the 1948 quota deadline. Fresno citizens straightened the matter out

Father Slain Halting Fight Between Sons

Chicopee, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP).—A peacemaker father, John (Ray) Lynch, sr., 49, was shot to death today as a fisticuff between his two sons ended in the critical wounding of one of the boys and arrest of the other on a murder charge.

James Lynch, 24, Navy veteran, was held without bail in the death of his father, who for 20 years was a well-known umpire at school and college baseball games in Connecticut Valley leagues.

Everett Lynch, 22, was reported on the danger list at Springfield Hospital.

A single shot wounded Everett and then killed the father, Police Capt. Frank A. Kaveny said.

James wept hysterically when told his father was dead, the captain said, and added:

"James told us how he and his father served in the Navy in the last war. He said what buddies they were and how much his father did for him."

Kaveny said "nobody knows" what the brothers battled over, but that James "took a pretty bad pummeling. "Then, the captain said, James seized a .30-caliber war souvenir carbine and fired the fatal shot.

James and his brother had been drinking, the captain said.

2 States Agree On Flash Flood Protection Plan

By The Associated Press

Legislators of Virginia and West Virginia have agreed on a plan designed to protect valley communities of their States against flash floods.

It is planned to seek funds for the Army engineers, who would undertake channel clearing and bank restoration work in the areas recently suffering from flood disasters.

The legislators, according to Representative Harrison (D., Va.), will ask that $1,250,000 be included in a deficiency appropriation bill. Plans for the action were drawn up at a meeting in the office of Senator Kilgore (D., W. Va.). Details will be worked out this week by Kilgore and Harrison with the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Woman Held Deserving Jail

Monterey, Calif., Aug. 6 (AP).—Mrs. Maureen Stam said today her former mother-in-law got what was coming to her when she went to jail rather than sign over GI insurance money to her.

The 32-year-old woman said she was going back to Salt Lake City—but she definitely had no intention of seeing Mrs. Nettie W. Capps in or out of jail there.

Mrs. Capps drew a 30-day sentence for ignoring a court order. She refused to transfer to a trust fund allotments from an insurance policy of her son and Mrs. Stam's first husband, Jacob L. Capps. He was killed in the Battle of the Bulge.

Mrs. Stam, twice married since she divorced Capps, said she agreed at the time any benefits from Capps' insurance policy should go into a trust fund for their three children. Later, however, she figured it was the children's money and she needed it for their support.

FBI Legion Post Installation of Officers Monday

11 Mountain Staters Support Home Rule

but were hazy on details of the Senate-passed Kefauver bill, now in the hands of a House District Subcommittee.

Adding today's total to those for previous checks made by The Washington Post of House members from New England, the West Coast and Pennsylvania, the total shows this division of opinion on the idea of a home rule measure for the District:

For:	87.
Against:	15.
Noncommittal:	11.

Here are the views given to The Washington Post, of new members from the area:

Harold A. Patten (D., Ariz.):

"I haven't formed an opinion on this bill as yet."

Would Hear Discussion

John E. Miles (D., N. Mex.):

"I haven't made up my mind as to how I would vote on it. I want to listen to the discussion on the floor on that bill."

John H. Marsalis (D., Colo.):

"I'm favorable to the idea of home rule but haven't studied the bill in question."

Wayne N. Aspinall (D., Colo.), a former school board president:

"I've been studying the matter but I never make up my mind on how to vote until the bill has been up on the floor."

Compton I. White (D., Idaho), a member of previous Congresses but not the Eightieth:

"The original provisions for the District of Columbia were very wise and I think they ought not to be changed. What would you gain by home rule? Home rule would just lower the dignity of Congress. People here seem to resent the presence of Congressmen. I certainly would vote against such a bill."

Walter S. Baring (D., Nev.), a former city councilman:

"I haven't read too much material on it but I think I'd favor letting them have their local government here. Part of our congressional bottleneck here is due to the time necessary to consider these local problems."

Mrs. Reva Beck Bosone (D., Utah):

"When the bill comes up, I won't miss any of the arguments, for as yet I haven't made up my mind. Washington, as the national capital, does belong to everyone in the United States, but I'm also for anything that aides the efficiency of the local government."

Usher L. Burdick (R., N. Dak.), a member of previous Congresses but not the Eightieth:

"I'm for the general principle of home rule but wouldn't want to comment on this bill. The general principle of home rule has been denied too long here."

Harold L. Lovre (R., S. Dak.):

"In general I believe in home rule. I don't see why they shouldn't have it here but, of course, I haven't heard all the arguments."

One member of the Eightieth Congress from this area was not recorded on either home rule roll call last year. This is his opinion now:

Antonio M. Fernandez (D., N. Mex.):

"I'm for it."

Three other members split their votes on the two roll calls last year—voting once for home rule, the other time against. These are their current opinions:

John R. Murdock (D., Ariz.):

"I don't know that I'm willing to say now how I'll vote. I have no time for District matters. I just feel the city ought to be given a good deal of local self-government and be freed of control of Congress as far as possible. I favor local self-government as a principle."

John Sandborn (R., Idaho):

"I'm inclined to feel the District is a little different from most any other part of the United States and I'm not sure I favor home rule for it."

Frank A. Barrett (R., Wyo.):

"I think I'd favor it this year."

Those members from the area who were recorded for or against home rule divide this way, on the basis of their 1948 votes:

For: Carroll (D., Colo.), Mansfield (D., Mont.), D'Ewart (D., Mont.), Granger (D., Utah), Lemke (R., N. Dak.) and Case (R., S. Dak.).

Against: Hill (R., Colo.).

Judge Postpones Alexandria Slum Charge Sentence

Imposition of sentence on Robert Sisson, convicted of maintaining 12 unsafe and unsanitary dwellings in Alexandria, was postponed for a second time in the city's police court yesterday.

Judge James R. Duncan reset the case for August 16 after Sisson said he planned to ask local rent control officials for permission to demolish the buildings. The postponement was recommended by City Attorney Joseph M. Pancoast.

Sisson, a 31-year-old Morrisville (Va.) farmer, was found guilty Friday on charges that he failed to follow instructions of the Health Department to provide sewage and repairs for the homes.

Voteless Delegate Proposed as Substitute

Congress would set up election machinery for such a vote.

The District had a voteless delegate in the House from 1871 to 1875. Such a delegate may appear and speak on the House floor and at committee meetings but has no vote in either case.

The House member disclosing the discussion said the proposal doubtless would not satisfy either the "all-out home rulers" or those who oppose any type of vote in the District. But, he said, it would pick up House votes from many members who have doubts on the matter and who would view it as a "compromise."

The Senate-approved Kefauver bill would set up an 11-member city council, nine elected and two appointed by the President. The bill would provide also for an elected Board of Education. A city manager as executive head of the city government would be named by the city council.

The idea of giving the District a delegate in the House was considered by the District Committee last year, but was knocked out of the Auchincloss bill, similar to this year's bill offered by Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.).

Kefauver rejected the idea of a delegate on the grounds the District should run its own municipal affairs through a locally elected council.

"Synthetic Home Rule"

The House member suggesting the delegate idea as a "compromise" said it would offer "a little more synthetic home rule than the synthetic Kefauver bill," a reference to charges it does not offer "complete home rule" because of the Constitutional provision that Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the District.

The seven-member subcommittee, headed by Representative Harris (D., Ark.), already has had one executive session on the home rule problem. Harris said yesterday he would "try to get some decision" at Monday's meeting.

He did not mention the delegate suggestion and the House member who did said he had not talked to Harris about the idea.

Chicago University To Study Sleeping Habits of Baby

Chicago, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Parents who pace the floor with their infants during the wee hours can look with hope to a new research project at the University of Chicago.

Scientists there have been given a $10,000 grant by Swift & Co. for a study of the sleeping habits of babies.

The scientists will seek to determine whether a 25 per cent increase in protein content of the infants' diet will induce a more restful slumber. The babies will be fed specially prepared meats.

An apparatus attached to the crib will record every movement made by the child, indicating the soundness of his sleep.

The Federal Diary

by Jerry Klutz

Here's What the Bill To Reclassify Pay Does and Doesn't Do

These are among the things the Senate's pay-reclassification bill for the 850,000 classified workers does and doesn't do:

First, and most important, it would raise the average salary of classified employes by $125.

It would transfer the 3900 clerical-mechanical employes of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the jurisdiction of the Treasury wage board and direct it to fix salaries of these employes on a prevailing rate basis.

It would recommend eventual transfer of the 100,000 CPC employes (crafts, protective and custodial) to local wage boards to fix their salaries.

It doesn't provide for Federal agencies to absorb the cost of the bill from existing funds. The cost is estimated at 110 millions a year.

Head charwomen, under the bill, would be paid $1.18 an hour and part-time charwomen would get $1.13 an hour.

It would give all employes, veterans and nonveterans, the right to appeal job classification to the Civil Service Commission.

It provides longevity increases for the first time in history for faithful and meritorious classified workers. An employe at the top of his salary grade could be given a maximum of three additional in-grade promotions, at intervals of no less than every three years, if his agency certifies his work as "meritorious." The provision is aimed to help employes in dead-end jobs with no chance of promotion.

No employe would be given a salary cut under the bill, even though a number of existing grades would be merged and abolished.

It would be the broadest pay-raise bill in years, covering such usually exempt agencies and employes as Reconstruction Finance, Home Owners Loan and other such Government-owned corporations, and Displaced Persons, Atomic Energy, Soldier's Home (agencies whose employes are excepted from the Classification Act), and jobs such as lawyers, engineers, experts, etc.

It formally recommends up to $15,000 salaries for the heads of a number of agencies such as Internal Revenue, Social Security, Farmers Home, CAA, Bureau of Standards, Forest Service, etc.

It is not retroactive to July 1, although an amendment might be added to make it effective as of that date.

It gives the Civil Service Commission authority to set up a pay schedule for employes in hazardous jobs—but in no case could hazardous pay be more than 50 per cent greater than base pay. In most cases it would be a great deal less.

And the bill, if Congress approves it, will be signed into law by the President. The Civil Service Commission has indorsed it in principle as most constructive and progressive.

ECONOMY: Senator Long (D., La.) will lay heavy stress on the economy feature of his bill. The Management Improvement Plan and Rewards provision of the bill would give Federal employes an incentive to do a better job at less cost to the taxpayers. The committee report on it states:

"Under regulations issued by the Bureau of the Budget, each department is required to make systematic reviews of each of its activities, functions and organization units on a continuing basis, and determine how well they are meeting proper tests of efficiency and economy. Groups that prove to be outstanding by these tests are to be identified for particular commendation.

"As a further incentive to efficiency and economy, the individual supervisors and employes who make outstanding contributions through their own superior accomplishments may be given pay rewards up to the equivalent of three salary step-increases in their grades.

"These awards are to be made by efficiency awards committees in the departments. The total awards to any individual or group of employes may not exceed 25 per cent of the savings realized by the superior accomplishments of such individual or group.

"Many charges have been made that supervisors engage in 'empire building.' What is meant is that they try to build up unnecessarily large working staffs in order to enhance the prestige of their own jobs. This practice could not exist under proper management conditions, but the widespread belief that it does happen is a proper basis for preventive measures. If it becomes personally profitable for a supervisor to operate more efficiently and economically, this incentive should bring about better results, and the savings to the Government under the proposed plan would be at least three times the cost of the plan in operation."

Baby Burned To Death; 3 Rescued From Fire

Boy's 2 Brothers, Paralyzed Man, 80, Saved From Blaze In Rooming House

An 18-month-old boy was burned fatally yesterday in a rooming house fire that broke out at 1317 10th st. nw., while his mother was buying groceries near by.

His two older brothers and a paralyzed 80-year-old roomer were rescued by neighbors and firemen as the mother returned and rushed into the burning house to find the baby.

The baby, who died at Children's Hospital about three hours after the fire, was Benjamin Little, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Little. The father, a Capital Transit streetcar operator, was at work when the fire broke out shortly before 11 a. m.

Fireman Rescues Child

Benjamin was taken out through dense smoke by Pvt. Maceo Bonds of No. 4 Engine Company, who wrapped the baby in a coat after going up the stairs and finding him on the floor of a second-story front room.

The roomer, Edward Cook, was treated for burns on his left hand. cuts and bruises at Emergency Hospital. His rescuer, who was cut on the hands and face and treated at the scene, was Cornelio Hernandez, 46, former husband of Mrs. Little, who lives at 1321 10th st.

The mother, Mrs. Geraldine Little, 42, was treated for a minor cut on the head and a small burn on the arm.

Hernandez said the tragedy would not have occurred if his 15-year-old daughter, Eda Christina, had not left for summer camp earlier in the morning. She lives with Mrs. Little, her mother, and usually remained in the house to care for the children when the parents went out, he explained.

Hernandez said he took Cook down from the second-story back room when Cook shouted out the window, and neighbors called the Fire Department. He did not know the children were also inside, he said.

Forced Back by Smoke

As firemen and neighbors were bringing the two older boys, Gregory, 3½, and Jonathan, 2½, down from the second-story front room, Mrs. Little arrived at the three-story brick dwelling.

Shouting that the baby was still in the house, she dropped groceries and ran in, but was forced back by the smoke as Private Bonds ran up the stairs.

Benjamin was given oxygen before being taken to Emergency Hospital, where he was treated for third-degree burns over almost his entire body. He was transferred to Children's Hospital, where Dr. Benjamin Golden, family physician, and hospital doctors worked for his life in vain. Dr. Golden said the child's lungs were also burned.

Mrs. Little told police she had left the three children in the backyard when she went to the grocery store.

Woman Who Hid Burns In Critical Condition

A 32-year-old woman who reported a fire in her apartment late Friday night but did not tell anyone she had been hurt, was found yesterday afternoon to be in critical condition with second-degree burns over her entire body.

She is Miss Margaret Lafferty of the Cavalier Apartments, 3500 14th st. nw. Police learned that she had been burned when she fell asleep on her day bed and the day bed caught fire.

She phoned the apartment switchboard and the fire was put out with an extinguisher by Harold Bucey, apartment engineer, and George Lipscomb, elevator operator.

They did not notice Miss Lafferty had been burned, and she made no mention of her injuries when F. L. Hagerman, apartment manager, telephoned her yesterday morning, police said.

When Miss Lafferty missed a luncheon date yesterday with Mrs. Helen McGuire of 4518 Maple ave., Bethesda, a fellow employe of the United States Public Health Service, Mrs. McGuire phoned and then came to the apartment. There she found Miss Lafferty had been burned and called a doctor, who sent her to Emergency Hospital in a Fire Department ambulance at 1:30 p. m.

Police learned yesterday from Hagerman that a similar incident occurred in Miss Lafferty's apartment about a year ago.

Escape Car Of Suspected Killer Found

A stolen car in which the slayer of a young Savage, Md., mother is believed to have escaped, and which was recovered near Warrenton, Va., yesterday, was identified as belonging to Louis Maxwell, a neighbor of the slain woman.

Identification of the vehicle was made by Maryland State police of the Waterloo, Md., barracks who visited the Virginia town.

Police are seeking the slain woman's husband, John Barker, a 22-year-old carpenter. Mrs. Barker was found Friday, battered to death with a hammer.

In the meantime, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Smith of Mount Holly, N. C., parents of the slain woman, and Carl Waters, brother-in-law of Mrs. Barker, spotted a man they believed to be Barker in Charlottesville, Va., as they were driving north to Savage.

Later the travelers noticed the abandoned car near Warrenton and notified Sheriff S. S. Hall, jr. of that town.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were returning to Mount Holly yesterday with the Barkers' two children, Jerry, 3-months-old and Brenda, 18 months.

Smith told police he knew the Barkers were having domestic arguments and, he said, he once was obliged to intervene.

$48 Camera Stolen

A movie camera worth $48 was stolen out of a parked auto in the 200 block of 1st st. se., yesterday. The camera and parked car, police reported, belong to Maj. Fred P. Dyhrmann, USA, 1231 Shepherd st. nw.

Library Reports

Shift Noted To Peaceful Living Books

Reading interests of Washingtonians have shifted from the pursuits of war to peacetime living, the Public Library reported yesterday.

More books are being borrowed on such topics as existentialism, home refurnishing and hobbies. Fewer go out on military affairs, aeronautics and home building.

The library, in a report to Ralph L. Thompson, assistant librarian, states that the number of books lent increased during the past year ending June 30 by 135,000 to 2,853,943 volumes.

There has been a steady mounting of book reading here toward a depression-year high of slightly more than three million, Thompson states.

"Despite the saying that you can't read and look at the same time, a recent survey shows that the deterrent effect of television on reading soon levels off," Thompson said.

But it is apparent that both best sellers and older titles are given an impetus by the movies, radio and television. The personal appearance of the author in this city invariably creates interest in his work also.

Sixty-three per cent of the volumes circulated were nonfiction. At the same time, Washingtonians read the same novels demanded by the rest of the Nation yet maintained a greater sustained interest in history, biography, philosophy the applied sciences, arts and crafts, geopolitics and supersonics.

Interest in "personal problems and what to do about them" books remains high. The same goes for titles dealing with personality development, general medicine and lay psychiatry.

Also the demand for "refresher" material continues, especially in mathematics and physics. Job examinations have increased demand for subjects related to engineering, steam boilers, air conditioning, refrigeration, heating and electricity.

Even housewives are using the library more. They are using books to do a better job in child care and training, home management, cookery and purchasing, the library reports.

Thieves Raid Store

Thieves stole $300 in cash, an air rifle and several boxes of pellets from a hardware store at 2004 14th st. nw. early yesterday, the owner, John F. Meenehan, reported to police.

D. C. Officials Attack Free Insurance

District officials, aided by the Better Business Bureau of Washington, are cracking down on merchants' offers of "free insurance" or "protection" on sales of articles, it was reported yesterday.

Superintendent of Insurance Albert F. Jordan stated in his annual report to the Commissioners that several retailers are squeezing into insurance activity although they are unlicensed to do so. The crackdown does not affect legitimate guarantees of quality, he emphasized.

A jeweler offered "free insurance "on sales of articles, guaranteeing to replace articles lost or stolen or damaged by wind or fire, Jordan said. Another promised insurance against attacks by moths on furniture sold by him and several television dealers offered "protection" against failure of television tubes, he reported.

Serious Problems

Jordan said such offers have become serious problems in other cities and he expected another wave of such come-ons in Washington.

The District insurance official said that "the business of insurance is essentially a business of selling promises" and, therefore, the city government has a responsibility to keep a close check on those who do so to determine whether they can carry out their obligations.

Businessmen who are not licensed to write insurance are not subject to such supervision and, therefore, must be kept out of the field, Jordan explained.

Another illegal practice disclosed by Jordan was that of "twisting" by insurance agents. One lost his license for inducing a person to let an existing life insurance policy lapse and "to his disadvantage" to take a new policy with another company.

Washington is an important point in the insurance business. There is more life insurance in force in the District than in any one of 20 States and more life insurance companies are domiciled in the District than in any one of 30 States. Jordan ascribed the former to the high income level and stable employment in the city.

At present more than 6000 licenses have been issued to insurance companies, representatives and brokers. Two new companies were chartered in the District during the fiscal year and another is in process.

On D. C. Property

Realty Tax Base, Yield Show Boost

The real estate tax base in the District was increased by $21,714,561 during the past fiscal year resulting in an additional yield in taxes of $434,290.

Tax Assessor Edward A. Dent, in his annual report to the Commissioners, reported that the District now has $2,645,282,928 in taxable real estate. This represents 48.7 per cent of the 30,909 acres in the city.

The remainder of the real estate is tax-free. Dent reported 42.2 per cent of this belongs to the Federal Government, 3.4 per cent to the District and 5.7 to foreign governments, charitable institutions and other tax-exempt groups.

Last month the Commissioners appointed a committee to study how big a landowner the District is and what the land is used for.

The tax base increase resulted from improvements placed on taxable land and boosts in the valuation of land because of development of the area. A total of $1,016,184,963 was listed as land values and $1,629,097,965 as the value of improvements on the land.

The real estate tax during fiscal 1949, which ended June 30, was $2 per $100 of assessed valuation. On July 1, the rate went up to $2.15 per $100.

At the 1949 auction of pieces of property sold for delinquent taxes, a total of 1495 parcels were sold to individual buyers at $139,575. The remaining 1384 went to the District for $19,219. In 1948, 1342 lots were sold for $91,285 to individuals and 1228 for $12,596 to the city government.

Bottle 'Bomb' Tossed in Car; Driver Burned

A mystery man, perhaps demented, who tossed a bottle of incendiary chemicals into the car of a Washington radio dealer when the latter stopped for a red light, was being sought yesterday by police.

Two fingers of the right hand of the dealer—Robert E. Fabritz, 31, of 3200 Shepherd st., Mount Rainier, Md.—were burned to the bone when he opened the bottle, thinking it might be perfume. Only because it exploded before he could bring it to his nose to smell it did Fabritz escape much more serious burns.

Here is the story Fabritz, who owns the United Radio and Electric Co. at 2062 Rhode Island ave. ne., told police:

At about 10 o'clock Friday night he stopped for a red light at Ninth and Mount Vernon pl. nw., and a black-haired man of dirty appearance approached his car, carrying under his arm a cardboard box about 15x9x3 inches.

Takes Bottle from Box

Removing a small bottle from the box—Fabritz' impression was that it contained a number of bottles—the man murmured the words "Here's something for you" and dropped it on the front seat of the car.

Thinking he was the recipient of a salesman's sample—soap or perfume—Fabritz drove on to a bar he was headed for at 12th and Eye sts. nw. He parked his car and, with his thoughts on perfume, opened the top of the bottle to bring it up to his face for a smell.

Suddenly there was a gush of flame and smoke, the flame eating into Fabritz's hand. He was able to hail a nearby policeman, who drove him to Casualty Hospital. He was released after treatment of the two fingers, burnt as far as the bone.

Detective H. R. Cohea of the First Precinct, said he thought the chemical in the bottle was a phosphorous oxide—but will take it to an Internal Revenue Bureau chemist Monday for analysis.

Description Given

In the fact that Fabritz said the mystery man took the bottle from a box that may have contained other bottles was the suggestion that he might be demented and that Washington motorists should be on the lookout for him.

His description:

White, 35 years of age, 5 ft. 10 in., 165 pounds, wearing white shirt, dark pants, no tie, glasses, black hair, and of dirty appearance.

Fabritz seemed to feel it was not a personal thing. "I have no enemies," he told police. "If he wasn't crazy, he was some kind of jerk wanting to play a joke." But he did say that when the man came up to the car he thought he was someone he might have seen once before in a radio store when he, Fabritz, was purchasing radio equipment.

Grocer Owing $4341 Cited In Lien for Tax Delinquency

A grocer here was cited in a Federal tax lien notice filed in District Court yesterday as owing the Government $4341.24.

He is H. W. Haraway, operator of a store at 1428 Park rd. nw. He declined to comment on the lien which states that the sum is due on income taxes for 1946 and 1947.

In another lien notice, Mrs. Jimmie R. Henderson, rooming house operator at 1765 Massachusetts ave., is charged with owing $2318.98. She told a reporter that her attorney had computed the amount she owed for 1944, the year involved.

Another lien notice charged that $1507 was owed by the Windsor Corp., 1411 H st. nw., for admissions taxes due in April, 1949. A spokesman of the company said that a check for the entire sum was mailed on Friday.

Leon Spivak, of 1025 Vermont ave. nw., owes $723, a lien notice states. Spivak recently was sued on charges that he committed adultery with a housewife. A District Court jury awarded the husband, Simon Beloff, 67, the sum of $30,000.

16 Home Buyers Sue Builder, Charge Specifications Change

The owners of 16 homes sued builder Morris Pollin & Sons, Inc., for $5000 each in District Court yesterday.

The homeowners charge that their dwellings did not comply with specifications of sample houses the defendant put up in the 6300 block of North Capitol st.

The allegedly deficient houses are situated at 18, 24, 61, 63, 64, 68, 70, and 73 Tuckerman st. nw., and 6409, 6413, 6415, 6419, 6421, 6427, 6429, and 6501 North Capitol st.

According to the plaintiffs' attorney, Douglas A. Clark, the homes were purchased for slightly more than $12,000 each, but in their present state are worth much less.

The complaint charges that the householders were not allowed to enter their houses until after the doors were placed on them, and then they learned that they were of inferior construction and design and that workmanship and materials had been misrepresented.

2 Senators Urge District To Move On Slums Now

Sparkman, Flanders Say Housing Law Opens Door for U. S. Loans, Grants

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

A Democratic and a Republican Senator have jointly appealed to the Commissioners to launch an immediate attack on city slum conditions with funds now available to them under the new National Housing Act.

Senators John J. Sparkman (D., Ala.), and Ralph E. Flanders (R., Vt.)—key figures in the year-long Capitol Hill drive for slum action—asked Friday for a statement of the Commissioners' slum clearance and public housing plans over the next six years.

Their letter pointed to provisions in the recently enacted country-wide housing act that opens the door to District acceptance of Federal loans and grants for slum clearance and public housing.

The Senators' letter states:

"Many members of Congress have been concerned for a number of years by the slum conditions in the District of Columbia. Those of us who have made surveys of slums across the country feel that the ones in Washington are among the worst.

Special Efforts Made

"We would like to know what action the Board of Commissioners has taken to benefit immediately from terms of the housing act of 1949.

"We would also appreciate a brief statement of the broad plans of the Commissioners for slum clearance and public housing in the District during the next six years, the duration of the new housing program."

Commissioner Guy Mason, only member of the board now in the city, feels that the District government should take advantage of the National Housing Act funds, it was learned yesterday.

"We will never really solve the District slum problem," Mason has said, "until we have more low-cost housing, that's all there is to it."

The city heads, now attempting a one-block experiment with the Baltimore plan of slum rehabilitation, have always hoped that the District's own slum clearance act would procure the necessary funds for a broad attack on blighted areas. The 3-year-old law carries a 20-million-dollar authorization.

That act of 1948 was hailed at time of passage as the country's model slum clearance act. But Congress has not appropriated a single penny to implement the program over three consecutive years.

The District Redevelopment Land Agency—the operating body established by the 1948 act—is likewise stymied for lack of administrative funds. Expenses to date have been paid by the agency's chairman, Mark Lansburgh.

One provision of the national bill offers the beleaguered Land Agency an alternative method of obtaining operating money—from the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Another section of the housing act, designed to aid the District's housing problem, restores to the National Capital Housing Authority site acquisition powers for public housing.

NCHA Director John Ihlder has announced plans to apply for Federal assistance to construct 5500 public housing units within the District over the next three years.

New Tests Urged For Older Drivers

Reexamination of all District drivers 65 or older on expiration of their current licenses was proposed yesterday by George E. Keneipp, Director of Vehicles and Traffic.

The matter will be taken up by the District Commissioners, possibly this week.

Keneipp, in a letter to the Commissioners, said he suggested reexamination on the basis of recent New Jersey experience showing nearly 70 per cent of motorists over 65 defective in some respect from the driving standpoint.

He estimated 10,000 persons over 65 now hold District driving permits and that 3000 to 4000 would have to be reexamined each year.

The reexamination, he said, would consist of an eye test, a written or oral test on traffic regulations and a road test.

There is no reason to believe, he told the Commissioners, that the District would not have a similar experience to that of New Jersey.

"There are thousands of permit holders in the District," he said, "who either never took an examination at all (if they obtained their permits before such an examination was required), or if they took any kind of an examination, will hardly remember of what it consisted."

The first examinations, he said, were given some time after 1925. He said his office constantly receives calls from relatives, friends and neighbors of elderly persons asking these persons be reexamined.

His department, he pointed out, long has advocated periodic reexamination of all drivers, perhaps once every six years, but that facilities of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic do not now permit such practice.

Postlude

Evangelista Lends Color To Traviata

By Paul Hume

Verdi's Traviata was last night's Watergate opera, given by the San Carlo Opera Company.

Lucia Evangelista was the chief protagonist. Her voice, her manner and her whole conception of the part is sympathetic. She easily encompasses the range required for the role, except for the highest notes in the first act.

In the second and third act her soft singing was melting in appeal and beautifully projected. She is a fine artist and should grow in many of the lighter lyric roles. There was an unusual sympathy between her work and that of the conductor, Carlo Moresco, who led the opera with well-judged control.

Chorus, Ballet Add Color

Richard Tucker came from the Metropolitan to sing Alfredo, Violetta's hapless lover. His voice is clear and easily produced. He knows the role, but disdains subtleties which might lift it from routine lines. Nonetheless, his dramatic work in Act Three was suitably impressive.

The chorus and ballet added color and good tone to the whole picture. Only in the choral accompaniment to the third-act ballet did the gentlemen singers fail badly. Otherwise, as in Friday night's Aida, the ladies and gentlemen of the chorus did much to remove the stigma I laid upon them for the first night's work.

Gowns Are Handsome

We regret that Stefan Ballarini singing the elder Germont last night was not in good voice. Only on his higher notes did he command much stability, and his conception of the part, one of the worst roles in opera, is rather unimaginative.

Scenery and costumes for Traviata were sufficient and filled the large space well. Miss Evangelista wore particularly handsome gowns. Fortune Gallo's company is putting on the best opera repertoire this town has seen in years. With a few more younger singers in his chorus and a larger orchestra, he would have performances of standard works that stand well in comparison with most opera today.

The son of an Episcopal minister, Attwell is survived by his widow, a son, daughter and three grandsons. Funeral services will be held August 9, at Montclair, N. J.

At Harrington

Policeman's Alert Mind Nabs Suspect

A quick mind and a skeptical nature yesterday paid off for Pvt. Robert A. Baker, 34, of the First Precinct Station, in the form of a captured grand larceny suspect.

Baker's talents were unveiled in front of the Harrington Hotel, 11th and E sts. nw., when he addressed the usual question to a loiterer there. The man said he was Francis Walker, 34, of 1836 13th st. nw., a sample carrier.

On the surface, it was a good answer. Sample carriers are the beasts of burden for salesmen, and many salesmen live at the Harrington when in Washington.

Yes, but most business places are closed these summer Saturdays and salesmen wouldn't be very active, and Pvt. Baker wanted to know more about this sample carrier.

A check with headquarters revealed the interesting data that Walker was wanted for grand larceny, to wit, absconding with $250 from the Fuller Products Co., 634 S st. nw., in May, 1948. Walker was arrested and charged.

Baker, who has been on the force 10 years, lives at 5620 Sherrier pl. nw., and has three children, Doris, 10, Judith, 7, and Diane, 4.

Trolleys Use Dupont Tunnel Next Month

Northbound streetcars will begin running underground at Dupont Circle early in September, District Director of Highways J. N. Robertson disclosed yesterday.

Robertson said the southbound streetcars will be routed through the underpass about November 15, and the entire structure will be completed and opened to vehicular traffic about February 1.

The project contractor, John McShain, Inc., has 150 men at work seeking to make up for time lost during recent strikes, Robertson said.

Robertson is now studying a complaint by L. E. F., Prince of 1327 Connecticut ave. nw. on the lack of construction activity on that block, one of those involved in the underpass. In a letter to the District Commissioners, Prince complained that property owners and merchants "have suffered large and sometimes ruinous losses" because of the construction work, and urged speedy action to complete the project.

The week was sponsored by the Retail Merchants Division of the Silver Spring Board of Trade. Charles Kopeland, executive secretary of the Board of Trade, was director of the event.

Mrs. Betty McDevitt, who presided during th week as the community's honorary mayor, ended her reign at the ceremony.

Oil Base Issue Up Tuesday For Decision

Leonardtown, Md., Aug. 6.—The fate of a proposed oil tank base at Piney Point may be decided Tuesday by the St. Marys County Board of Commissioners.

Strong opposition to the base, sought by Steuart Bros., Inc., of Washington, has been expressed by residents of the Piney Point area.

The commissioners will announce their decision to favor or oppose the project at their regular meeting Tuesday, Mrs. Sara King, secretary to the board, disclosed today.

Wharf and Pipeline

Plans for the base, to be operated by L. P. Steuart & Bros., Inc., call for construction of a 1100-foot wharf extending into the Potomac River, a pipeline across Piney Point Creek and installation of storage tanks on shore.

Piney Point is in the center of St. Marys County's resort section. Many Washingtonians maintain summer homes there.

The commissioners attended a public meeting conducted by the District Engineer's office yesterday at Valley Lee, but did not take part in the discussion.

See Threat to Oystering

Main opposition to the proposed oil terminal is centered around possible disruption of the fishing and oystering industries, principal source of livlihood for many area residents.

Opponents contend that oil seepage from the pipeline would pollute the water with a resultant effect on underwater fish life. They also maintain that the wharf, extending nearly a quarter mile into the river, would constitute a menace to small boat navigation, forcing craft to leave the shelter of the river bank in rough weather.

At yesterday's meeting, Capt. John W. Califf, of the District Engineer's office, said it is Army policy to accede to the wishes of local governing bodies in ruling on such applications.

Pressed for a direct statement that his office would disapprove the application if the commissioners go on record against it, he replied: "We would take that into consideration."

Not Objectionable, He Says

In Washington today, Curtis Steuart, vice president of the operating concern, declared the oil terminal would not be objectionable to nearby residents.

"There can be no seepage," he declared, "as the pipeline will be constructed entirely of welded pipe, tested to withstand 250 pounds of air pressure. There would be no threaded connections from which oil could seep."

He also emphatically stated that no trucks would be used to convey the oil to Washington over the crowded Southern Maryland highways. All transportation will be by barge, he said.

Presently, the oil company is bringing in oil from Baltimore by barge—a 30-hour trip, he said. By using the proposed base, the time would be shortened to 12 hours.

Polio Seen on Wane In Some Centers

By The Associated Press

Infantile paralysis mounted sharply in the Nation last week, but there were signs the peak had passed in some hardest hit areas.

A State by State survey by the Associated Press showed some 1400 new cases developed in the last four days. This boosted the 1949 total to date to approximately 9400 more—more than half again as high as the comparable period in 1948, second worst polio year on record.

Health officials in Texas, Arkansas and Detroit, and the U. S. Public Health Service in Washington reported some evidence of a slackening in the upward pace. A Health Service spokesman said there was a chance the polio season might end earlier this year.

In Texas, which is experiencing its worst polio year with 1218 cases through June 30, Dr. George Cox, State health officer, expressed the cautious view the disease has leveled out somewhat.

The Arkansas Health Department said there is a definite slowdown of the disease in that State. The Arkansas situation had been termed critical with 537 cases and 32 deaths this year, compared with 51 cases and no deaths last year.

At Detroit, where 130 cases have been reported so far this year, Dr. Bruce Douglas, city health commissioner, expressed hope that the "mild epidemic" there had passed its peak.

There still were ominous reports from some other sections.

Polio increased rapidly in Tennessee with 48 new cases reported the last week in July. Cases also mounted swiftly in Illinois. Illinois health officials called attention to the fact that not more than 1 in 3000 persons contacts the disease even in an epidemic year.

The disease is not at the epidemic stage in Wisconsin, but Dr. A. F. Zintek of the board of health said it was a severe type, with many bulbar cases.

In only three States, the survey showed—Indiana, Kansas and North Carolina—is the disease proving comparatively highly fatal.

Approximately one out of each 10 cases of the disease in those States has ended in death.

The virus causing the disease has been very mild, meanwhile, in some other sections. At least six States have had no deaths. These include Delaware, Maine, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

In 1948 there were 5793 polio cases reported through June 30. The total for the year soared to 27,680, topped only by the approximately 30,000 in 1916.

282 Pass D.C. Nursing Test In Last Year

A total of 282 women successfully passed registered nurse examinations given by the District Nurses Examining Board during the past fiscal year. Another 46 failed the test.

The group raised the active list of registered nurses to 6554. Included were 565 who were placed on the list through reciprocity arrangements with other States.

The District has eight accredited schools of nursing and one postgraduate institution, the board stated in its annual report to the District Commissioners. During the year the board published a revised version of "Regulations and Standards for Accredited Schools of Nursing" in Washington.

chair and remain there with a very "embarrassed" feeling.

While sudden profane and obscene expressions and body movements are the chief symptoms of the disease, it does not usually attack persons who habitually are given to a good deal of profanity, Dr. Archer said.

"Even the President has used 'S.O.B.', he observed.

In fact, the disease when it happens generally strikes "very refined people," said Dr. Ascher.

Five at Clinic Since 1913

The present case would bring to five the total number at the Phipps Clinic since it opened in 1913, two of which were identified by Dr. Ascher.

One patient was attending a Washington baseball game when, with no warning, he began to shout obscene expressions, creating quite a commotion in the ball park.

Another was riding in a crowded elevator when the symptoms began coming on and he blurted forth an obscenity.

It is believed, said Dr. Ascher, that the disease is a subconscious revolt against authority—frequently the authority of the father, for the disease ordinarily begins when children are 8 to 14 years old. But it may be a revolt against any authority, he said—"church, boss," or even policeman.

The rare disease was first described by Gilles de la Tourette in France, about a half century ago.

7½-Pound Son Born To Esther Williams

The child, named Benjamin Stanton, weighed 7 pounds 8 ounces.

Miss Williams and radio announcer Ben Gage were married November 25, 1945. It is their first child.

3 New Polio Cases Reported for Area

Three new polio cases, including two from Prince Georges County, were reported by Children's Hospital here yesterday.

The local case was a 5½-year-old girl from the 3400 block of Oakwood ter. nw. She boosted the local total to 16, compared with 20 for this date last year.

The other two were a 4-year-old girl from Beltsville and a 3-year-old girl from the 400 block of 48th ave., Capital Heights. The cases brought the Prince Georges total to 17 and raised the Greater Washington total to 51.

C. U. Deaf School Gives Certificates To 19 Teachers

Nineteen certificates were issued to teachers attending the Catholic University of America Institute for the preparation of teachers for the deaf and hard-of-hearing as the school completed its second year last week.

Rev. Francis T. Williams of Fordham University, institute head, said plans were already under way for the addition of courses for teaching religion to deaf children on an elementary level and for teaching lip reading in next year's program.

Provisions are being made to double the enrollment in 1950 so that Catholic schools may be better equipped with teachers to aid the deaf and those with impaired hearing, Father Francis said.

This year's institute closed on Friday.

Heart Gives Up Its Secrets to Daring Surgery

National Heart Institute. But more importantly, he added, this progress has provided the broad base for research against all forms of heart disease.

Effects of Rheumatic Fever

Rheumativ fever and its subsequent effect on the heart is today the commonest cause of death among school children. It is the second commonest cause of death by disease in the 20 to 24 age group, and it causes much of the heart disease which crops up in later life. In the United States alone it affects more than a million persons, young and old.

Coronary thombosis, caused by blood clots in the arteries which feed the heart muscle itself, is perhaps more insidious since there is no practical way of detecting the condition before heart seizure. Between 15 and 20 per cent of its victims die at its first attack.

Congestive heart failure, not a disease in itself but a terminal condition of many effects, causes perhaps 30 per cent of all heart deaths. Its chief causes are rheumatic fever effects in later life and high blood pressure of long duration.

Damaged heart valves, coronary arteries impaired by clot or hardening processes, and the complicated conditions leading to congestive heart failure are the great killers yet to be overcome.

But today, thanks to research, new machines and improved techniques of diagnosis, heart patients are not without help or hope. Much of the heart crippling effects of rheumatic fever van be averted by preventive drug therapy. Children with malformed hearts are given new life by surgery. Oldsters in the grip of foreclosing doom can be given comfort and longer life expectancy.

The layman should know at least as much about his heart as he does of the engine under his automobile's hood.

The heart is the engine of the human body. Though its owner is seldom conscious of it (till it misfires) the heart is in there working. Seventy beats a minute, 100,800 beats a day, some 2,575,440,000 beats in the biblical age of threescore years and 10.

Work Accomplished

In one year the heart pumps about 650,000 gallons of blood, enough to fill a train of 72 tank cars of 9000 gallons each. It pumps this fluid through about 12,000 miles of bloodways in the human body, generating enough energy in 12 hours to lift a weight of 65 tons 1 foot into the air.

The heart is about half again the size of your closed fist, more pear-shaped than valentine, and weighs less than a pound. It's slightly smaller in women than in men. The part you feel beating is the apex, the bottom end.

Enclosed in a sac of elastic, fibrous tissue called the pericardium, the heart is actually a specialized muscle hollowed inside into two sides. Each side has two chambers, one atop the other. The septum, a solid muscular wall, runs down the center of the heart to block blood communication (in healthy hearts) between the two sides.

Two Pumps Working in Unison

The separation makes the heart two pumps even though they work in unison. The right side pump receives the used blood from the veins of the body and pumps it to the blood purifying chambers of the lungs; the left side pump receives the purified blood from the lungs and pumps it through the arteries to feed all body tissues, including the heart's own tissues.

In more detail, the blood flow works like this:

The right auricle, upper chamber of the right side pump, receives the used blood into its hollow interior which holds about three and one-half ounces. With the heart movement, this blood drops through a trapdoor valve of three triangular flaps of fibrous tissue, the tri-cuspid valve, into the right ventricle, or bottom chamber of the right side pump.

Heart muscle contracture then forces this used blood through another valve, called the semi-lunar valve because its three leaves are shaped like half-moons, into the bloodways which carry it to the lungs. The same pressure which opens the semi-lunar valve closes the tri-cuspid valve, preventing backflow into the right auricle.

While all this is going on the left side pump is similarly at work. Blood which has been purified or oxygenated, in the lungs is brought into the left auricle by the pulmonary veins. This may be confusing since veins in all other parts of the body carry used blood but here the blood is arterial.

The left auricle fills to its 3½-ounce capacity, and passes the blood down to the left ventricle through the mitral valve, so named because its two peaked flaps form the shape of a bishop's miter. Continued heart muscle action squeezes the blood out the left ventricle through another set of semilunar valves (the aortic valve) into the great vessel (aorta) and the circulatory feeding system for the body.

Only one heart beat is felt because both pumps, though independent, contract and expand simultaneously in a trigger mechanism that heart specialists wish they knew more about.

The heart valves, which are attacked by infections such as syphilis, rheumatic fever and others, and the heart's own feeding system of coronary arteries, are the main trouble sites. Heart surgeons, the daring pioneers of surgical progress in the past 10 years, have pretty well licked some of the most common forms of congenital heart defects, those present at birth.

There is but little they can do yet, however, on diseased valves inside the heart or clogged arteries in the network of vessels which feed the heart muscles.

Some, like Dr. Claude Beck, of Western Reserve, Cleveland, have rasped this network to stimulate it to increased feeding function; or have packed well-blooded tissue from the abdomen in transplant to cover the heart, or have even grafted an arm vein segment to the aorta to carry more fresh blood to the impaired heart feeding system.

Fever Growths Removed

Other surgeons, like the late Dr. Horace G. Smithy, of the Medical College of South Carolina, who died of his own diseased heart valves, have actually entered the human heart and snipped away rheumatic fever disease growths around the valves. Such heart surgery is dramatic but so limited it is more a research matter than therapy.

Perhaps the greatest deterrent to heart surgery progress is the constant movement of the heart, a continuous process so vital that within 3½ minutes after the heart is stilled the brain deteriorates to the point where revival of body functions would be futile.

It doesn't take any particular skill to restart a heart which has been stilled, one heart specialist reminded a session of doctors at the American Medical Association's latest convention, in Atlantic City, N. J. The heart is so naturally a working organ that it can manually or mechanically be made to beat again.

But what profit is there to start the heart beating again after the mental functions are gone, he asked? He then showed a moving picture of the physical contortions of a man brought back to "life" 20 minutes after the heart had stopped.

The picture would have been different had he, the surgeon, been able to get at that man's heart and get it beating again in the bare three to four minutes the brain can do without blood's nourishment.

It may well be that some day the hospitals and their surgeons will be prepared to cut into the chest the moment the heart stops, and get that heart back to its steady flubb . . . dub within that small time safety margin. But even when that time comes the lives revived will be few.

More importantly, surgeons are seeking some meaps to spell off the failing heart, to give it the rest it needs or to give them time to unclog its feedlines, cleanse the carbons of infection from its valves, or strengthen walls and vessels weakened to the point of collapse or rupture.

Reservations Open for 15 at Heart Camps

Reservations for 15 white children between 7 and 14 with heart conditions are still available at the new heart camps sponsored by the Washington Heart Association, Dr. Bernard J. Walsh, chairman of the association's camp committee, has announced.

Located near Dunfors, Va., the camps will open August 17 for two weeks. It will mark "the first time in the history of Washington that camps have been operated exclusively for children with cardiac conditions," Walsh said.

There is no cost to the children attending the camps. Parents or welfare workers who know of children who would like to attend the camps have been urged to get in touch with the Heart Association at Executive 1807.

There are two camps — Camp Wonderland for Negro children and Camp Sunshine for white children. Quota for Camp Wonderland has been filled, Dr. Walsh said.

August, 1939—31 Days in Which Sands Ran Out

By Lee Grove

Post Reporter

AUGUST, warm month of 31 days, came quietly to Washington. Like other Augusts.

There had been jitterbugging to the music of a WPA orchestra the night before in the Ellipse.

Mirmiss had galloped home in the second half of the daily double to make it a $1119.60 payoff at Bel Air—the highest double in the history of the course. A performance of "Madame Butterfly" by Metropolitan Opera Company singers at the Watergate had drawn 25,000 persons.

Opening of 10 additional playgrounds for District children was announced. "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever" was being shown downtown.

There was labor trouble in Cleveland, and an attempted train robbery near Champaign, Ill.

And at the top of page one of The Washington Post, August 1, 1939, that people were reading at the breakfast table, there was a one-column headline: "Chamberlain Hopes Horror of War Will Compel Peace."

Neville Chamberlain—wasn't he the same "peace in our time" man who had been to Munich the year before?

Neville Chamberlain, Prime Minister, speaking in the House of Commons the day before: "This is the last occasion on which we shall have a debate on foreign affairs before the honourable members go away for the recess . . .

"In Europe, anxiety at the present time tends to center around the city of Danzig. It was, I think, on the tenth of this month that I made a statement in this House which in clear and unmistakable terms expressed the determination of His Majesty's government, and I feel that to add to that statement today could do nothing to strengthen it, and I do not wish to do anything to weaken it . . . "

On July 10 the Prime Minister had promised British aid to Poland "in case of a clear threat to her independence which she considers it vital to resist." Poland had said she would resist annexation of Danzig by Germany as a threat to Poland's security.

Now, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the day that Russia entered World War I against Germany, France and Britain were sending strategists to Moscow to begin military staff consultations.

Third-Term Conjecture

AUGUST had come to Washington with a 90-degree heat wave, and in New York Grover A. Whalen, president of the World's Fair Corp., announced a reduction in week-end admission prices.

In Washington there was talk of Vice President Garner's plans for a "front porch" campaign in Uvalde, Tex., for the Democratic Presidential nomination, and talk of President Roosevelt's running for a third term.

Senator Robert A. Taft announced his candidacy for the Republican Presidential nomination, and told a Cincinnati interviewer, "I am in favor of keeping out of European affairs."

In Washington, Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles disclosed that another protest had been lodged with the Japanese Foreign Office against the treatment of United States nationals by the Japanese military in China. It was a small story; the Japanese had been nipping the Americans and British for a long time.

August 5, and the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, biggest spending Congress in peacetime history and the New Deal's most hostile legislature, quit at 6:35 p. m. after voting $119,000,000 more crop loans and liberalizing Social Security benefits for the aged to stave off "wild-eyed" pension schemes.

Congress had authorized the greatest peacetime defense program in American history. For military and naval defense in 1940: $1,614,000,000.

It was a Saturday afternoon, and 17,000 National Guard troops were beginning two weeks of maneuvers at Manassas.

August was a time of vacations, maneuvers and mobilizations. The Italians were holding maneuvers in the Po Valley. The Germans were getting ready for maneuvers. The British were planning naval maneuvers.

From Turkey to Finland, more than eight million men would be under arms on continental Europe, in maneuvers that approached general mobilization, military observers estimated.

Said Prime Minister Chamberlain: "It is difficult to see how the problem can be resolved, unless by war itself."

Warsaw was filled with reports of the Nazis' warlike preparations in Danzig. And in Cracow, Marshal Edward Smigly-Rydz, commander of Poland's armed forces, declared: "Violence inflicted by force must be resisted by force."

Commented The Washington Post, editorially: "Hitler can no longer harbor the illusion that bluff alone will work. In this particular, Marshal Smigly-Rydz's speech helps clear the air and in so doing may be a constructive force for peace." It was Monday morning, August 7.

Same Old Story

THE first week of the month had passed. The diplomats were at their work. The war of nerves was continuing. But it was still a small story, or so it seemed. The war of nerves had been going on a long time.

Berlin, August 7.—Word is going around that everything is to be ready by August 15.

Warsaw, August 7.—The stealing of barbed wire from German military obstructions on the frontier has become a form of sport among Polish peasants.

Rome, August 7.—There is general satisfaction here over the decree giving definite structure to Spain's new regime. "The regime has all the characteristics of a Fascist party. As is reasonable, it fully utilizes the 20-year experience of Italian fascism," said Lavora Fascista.

In Germany, the visit of Albert Forster, Danzig Nazi leader, with Adolf Hitler at Berchtesgaden, was followed by a violent anti-Polish barrage in the German press.

"Danger of Polish War Hysteria." "High Water Mark of Polish Insolence." "Cheap Saber Rattling in Warsaw."

Poland must stop its "criminal war agitation," its "brazen provocation" of Danzig and the Greater German Reich.

Grist for Russia

IN MOSCOW, it was reported that the Russians were gathering a bumper crop of grain, and on the afternoon of August 8 the new United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Laurence A. Steinhardt, arrived.

In Rome, foreign observers were asking themselves why the Italian war games in the Po Valley ended prematurely.

People were saying that Hitler wanted to rule the world.

In a radio broadcast heard in the United States, Winston Churchill, British statesman, declared that on a German mountain peak "there sits one man who in a single day can release the world from the fear that now oppresses it, or in a single day can plunge all that we have and are into a volcano of smoke and flame."

It was only last year that Austria was liberated from "the horrors of self government," and the Czecho-Slovak Republic was later liberated from "the misery of independent existence," he remembered.

Albert Forster spoke in Danzig: "Ein Volk, ein Reich, ein Fuehrer"—One people, one nation, one leader, the Nazis chanted. But it was a milder speech than had been anticipated. Evidently the time was not yet for union with Germany.

In Belgrade there were authentic reports that Yugoslavia had declined Italo-German demands for "benevolent neutrality" in the event of war, with Axis control of Yugoslavian railroads and economics.

Count Ciano and Joachim von Ribbentrop, Italian and German Foreign Ministers, conferred at Salzburg. The Axis was putting pressure on Hungary, it was feared—Hungary, strategic springboard for a move against Poland or Romania.

A Brace for Platform

AT HYDE PARK, President Roosevelt warned the Democrats not to adopt a "straddlebug" platform, and the following day in Pittsburgh the national convention of the Young Democratic Clubs of America cheered a call for the nomination of FDR for a third term.

August 12, and the Ciano-Ribbentrop talks ended. No communiques issued. There was a general feeling that Italy had induced Germany to take a more moderate course. President Roosevelt left for a 10-day cruise in the North Atlantic aboard the cruiser Tuscaloosa.

Two days later, at Campobello, New Brunswick, the President announced the breaking of another precedent: The date of Thanksgiving would be moved forward from November 30 to November 23.

August 15, Tuesday, and they were saying it appeared clear that Germany had decided to try to resolve the Danzig situation through negotiation. But in Wednesday morning's paper:

Berlin, August 15.—Fuehrer Hitler was understood tonight to have set September 2 as the deadline for a "German solution" of the dangerous Danzig dispute—which would mean complete anschluss of the Free City with the Third Reich.

At the Shoreham Terrace there was a Ferdinand the Bull act, with blond twins, in which the bull nuzzled Paul McNutt affectionately.

In Paris and London there were troubled minds because the military consultations with Moscow did not seem to be making progress.

Mollie the Penguin died at the Zoo, and there was talk of opening Alaska to colonization by American citizens and also "artisans now fleeing Europe."

The tempo was increasing.

August 18: POLES SEIZE FRONTIER LANDS FOR DEFENSE AS NAZIS FORTIFY BORDER.

August 19: SLOVAKIA TAKEN OVER BY GERMAN ARMY.

Seizure of Slovakia broke a 5-month-old Hitler promise.

A Gallup poll showed that 76 per cent of the population expected the United States to be involved if Europe fought.

The Tie That Binds

AUGUST 22: REICH, RUSSIA PLAN NONAGGRESSION PACT, binding each of them for 10 years not to associate with any other grouping of powers which directly or indirectly is aimed at the other party.

Negotiation of the pact behind the backs of the French and British military missions in Moscow stunned, then angered Paris and London.

The British cabinet met for 3½ hours, announced the pact would not affect Britain's obligation to Poland. France agreed, decided to call 600,000 more men to the colors.

Said a Washington Post editorial: "The increasing friendliness between the Nazi and Communist dictatorships occasions no surprise to those who realize the close underlying similarity of these political philosophies and the important respects in which their national interests dovetail."

Berlin, August 22.—The German staff is reported to be ready for immediate military action by Thursday, August 24.

August 24: SOVIET SIGNS PACT . . . PRESIDENT RETURNING.

British warships were concentrating between the Danish and Norwegian coasts. The Royal Air Force was poised for action. Londoners were ordered to darken their windows. Parliament met and gave the government emergency powers.

Berlin, August 24: Word freely circulated that the German army would march at 6 p. m. today.

After a dramatic dash back to the Capital, President Roosevelt dispatched appeals for peace to Chancellor Hitler, to President Ignaz Moscicki of Poland, to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. In a radio broadcast from Rome, Pope Pius XII appealed for peace. From Brussels, in behalf of the small nations, Leopold of the Belgians appealed for peace.

Dewey Hat in Ring

AT Lakeside, Mich., District Attorney Dewey of New York City appeared in the open as a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency.

The Danzig Senate announced that Gauleiter Albert Forster was the supreme head of state of the Free City of Danzig.

In London, hospitals were ordered to prepare for war casualties.

In France, Premier Daladier, in a radio address to the French people: "There is not one of you who does not understand that if by lack of foresight, or by cowardice, we permit all these peoples to succumb one after another; that after having broken our word, betrayed our ideals and misunderstood our vital interests, we shall find ourselves without friends and without support, and that very soon this effort to dominate Europe will turn quickly against our own country."

On the basis of a reply from the President of Poland, President Roosevelt dispatched a second appeal to Chancellor Hitler.

Hitler, who expanded and contracted his demands on Poland like an accordion, summoned the British ambassador in Berlin, Sir Nevile Henderson. His patience was being exhausted by Poland, Hitler told the Briton, and he gave him his minimum demands.

The German government assured Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Luxembourg, that their neutrality would be respected.

Henderson flew back to London with Hitler's message. The British Cabinet began deliberations.

First Army Headquarters, Plattsburg, N. Y., Aug. 26.—The Plattsburg military games reveal grave deficiencies in the Army. Neither the National Guard nor the Regular Army is held fit for war.

In Rome there was optimism. Britain and France were expected to yield.

The Soviet parliament had discussed many things, but not ratification of the Nazi-Soviet pact. The Russians were strengthening their garrisons along the Polish border. Some people were wondering if there was a secret agreement directed against Poland in the pact.

In London, the cabinet disclosed that Hitler was demanding unconditional return of Danzig, a German-controlled transportation corridor from the Reich to Danzig across the Polish province of Pomorze, abandonment of the Anglo-Polish pact.

London, August 28.—Nevile Henderson this afternoon flew back to Berlin with the British reply. The cabinet was reluctant to close the door to negotiations, but refused Hitler's demands.

It was understood that Hitler found the British reply "not wholly negative" and would send a written reply to Britain.

In Washington, there was a feeling that Hitler was yielding.

And the August hours were slipping by.

The night of August 31 the Russians ratified the nonaggression pact.

'Attack' on Germany

IF A man getting up the morning of September 1 looked first at the sports page, he would have read that in a game in Chicago, the night before, the Nats had beat the White Sox, 4 to 3.

But on page one: ROOSEVELT REPORTS POLAND INVADED.

Berlin: Germany had been attacked, said Chancellor Hitler in a 5:11 a. m. proclamation to the army. The "counterinvasion" of Poland began at 5:45 a. m. Warsaw, Gdynia, Cracow, Katowice bombed by the Luftwaffe. Heil Hitler.

Washington: President Roosevelt pledged the country to make every effort to keep the Nation out of war.

Rome: Italy will remain neutral unless attacked, the Council of Ministers decided.

Berlin: The French and British ambassadors warned the German government to cease its aggression or Britain and France would fulfill their obligations to Poland.

And then it was Neville Chamberlain, on the short-wave radio, from No. 10 Downing Street: "France is joining Britain in fulfillment of her pledges. We have a clear conscience and the situation has become intolerable. Now that we have determined to finish it, I know that you will all play your part . . ."

Britannia, Britannia, dominions beyond the seas.

And in Washington, the District Communist Party said that in making a nonaggression pact with Hitler, Stalin had struck a blow for peace—weakening Hitler by joining forces with him.

And in a front page editorial The Washington Post asked, "Is Neutrality Possible?"

"To be neutral in thought means that whether Hitler wins or loses in this tremendous gamble is a matter of indifference. Is there anyone, in Congress or out, who can search his heart and really say it is of no concern to us who wins? If so, he is truly neutral. But it may be doubted if he is truly American."

It was Labor Day weekend.

In Washington, London, Paris, Berlin, Moscow; in Guadalcanal, Algiers, Sicily, Iwo Jima, Hiroshima, August, 1939, had passed into history.

New U. S. Policy Involves a 'New' Asia

THE WEEK IN HISTORY

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Pulitzer Prize-Winning Historian and Associate Professor of History at Harvard

LAST WEEK Secretary of State Acheson appointed a three-man committee, headed by Ambassador-at-Large Philip Jessup, to review the tough and tangled problem of American policy in the Far East. So far as most Americans were concerned, the mysterious East had never been more inscrutable than in the last few years. Or, if the trend of events in the Orient had often been clear enough, the problem of what United States policy should be had come to seem indescribably murky.

The basic event which United States policy plainly had to recognize was the awakening of Asia—its transformation from a vast, inchoate and impotent continent, acted upon by outside forces at will, into a focus of energy and violence, itself capable of acting upon the world outside. In recent years a broad and passionate Asian nationalism had sapped the structure of western colonialism. Allied with the insurgent nationalism had been a profound desire for social revolution, expressed most characteristically in the uprising of the peasant against the landlord and the tax-collector.

No regime which failed to cope with the twin forces of nationalism and social revolution could survive; and, where nationalist regimes tried to resist necessary social change, they delivered the revolution straight into the hands of the Communists. Thus in China, as Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang moved steadily to the right, Mao Tse-tung's Communist Party grew steadily in power and in ambition.

Could any American policy, short of direct military intervention, have averted a Communist victory in China? The release of the State Department white paper threw important new light on this problem, and statesmen and historians would doubtless argue it for years. But the question which faced Dr. Jessup's committee was not that of fixing past responsibilities. It was the more immediate question of where America should go from here.

Some Americans thought they knew the answer to this question. To Governor Dewey of New York, for example, China presented no particular problem. Just give the Chinese Nationalists enough arms, he told an audience at Colgate University last week, and they will take care of the Communists.

Others sought a solution in the opposite direction: Give the Chinese Communists time and a sense of security, they said, and nationalism would detach Mao from Moscow as it had already detached Tito.

But many could not see that the delivery of more arms to the Nationalist generals, who had already squandered so much military aid, would solve very much. As for Chinese Titoism, it stubbornly remained a form of pie in the sky. Mao stayed letter perfect in his devotion to Moscow (as, indeed, Tito himself had been at the beginning), while the Chinese Communist attitude toward American citizens was turning brutal and vindictive. Even Ambassador Leighton Stuart's departure for Washington had been obstructed for many weeks. The formal establishment of the Communist regime promised further to force the hand of Washington sometime in the not too distant future.

Was some other policy possible to the United States besides that of waiting? No one knew what Dr. Jessup's committee would recommend. But many observers felt that the best American hope lay in a political counteroffensive, based on vigorous support, economic, diplomatic, and, when necessary, military, for the non-Communist nationalist regimes of the Far East, particularly those of Nehru in India and Soekarno in Indonesia.

In the meantime, Communist persecution of Catholicism mounted in Czechoslovakia and Romania. At the same time, evidence accumulated to suggest that Francis Cardinal Spellman's recent unusual letters to Mrs. Roosevelt and to Governor Lehman might not have been the isolated acts of an American prelate. A papal pronouncement had already excommunicated Catholic Communists. In Germany last week, a pastoral letter warned Catholics not to vote for the anti-Communist Social Democratic Party in the approaching elections. Leaders of the Catholic-controlled Christian Democratic Union subsequently barred the possibility of a Catholic-Socialist coalition after this election.

If this decision should turn out to be a correct interpretation of what is apparently a stiffening Vatican line, there might be extremely grave repercussions on the Catholic-Socialist coalitions which have given political stability to Austria, France, Italy and, until recently, to Belgium.

In the United States, the traditional American faith in civil freedom was still in retreat. In Massachusetts, Governor Dever signed a bill excluding Communists from public office, even apparently if they were elected to that office. In Maryland, three State officials of Quaker affiliation were in trouble for refusing on religious grounds to sign the loyalty oath required under the peculiarly harsh Ober Anti-Subversive Act. And in New York, Paul Robeson disclosed that Communists had a conception of civil freedom not much different from that of the right-wing Mr. Ober in Maryland. According to the pro-Communist Mr. Robeson, members of the Socialist Workers Party (Trotskyite) and of the Ku Klux Klan were not entitled to the protection of civil liberties.

Dictator Zaim a New Force In Syria and Middle East

By Simon Allawardi

Associated Press Staff Writer

DAMASCUS—An explosive new personality has appeared in the Middle East: Husni El Zaim, dictator-president of Syria.

Already his ambitious reform program has brought comparisons to the late Kemal Ataturk, the poker-playing dictator-president who between 1923 and 1938 turned Turkey from a backward nation into a modern power.

Zaim, a stocky, aggressive soldier, still has a long way to go before he will rate with Ataturk. But since he emerged from a lifetime of army obscurity and seized power last March 30, he has come a long way.

From the day he grabbed the reins, Zaim has pressed reforms. He introduced price control into this inflation-ridden country. Merchants who ignored regulations were publicly whipped. Prices skidded downward. Violations stopped.

Taxes were increased. Previously the country had been run by a few big families, remnants of the old feudal days, who kept taxes low. Family trusts (Wakfs) were broken up and large amounts of property freed for redistribution.

Political parties were broken up—apparently a step toward suppressing any possible challenge to Zaim's power. A six-man commission was appointed to frame a new constitution. Until it goes into effect, Zaim is ruling by decree.

Press Under His Thumb

SIXTY of Damascus' 75 newspapers were shut down. The others are pro-Zaim. Although this was a blow to a free press, Zaim had one argument on his side: Many of Damascus papers had been fly-by-night sheets existing on the slippery edge of blackmail.

Zaim announced a five-year plan. It includes a new port at Lattaquieh, dams across the historic Euphrates and Orontes rivers and a drainage program for a large northern area between Lattaquieh and Alerpo. Water for large-scale new irrigation projects would be provided by the dams.

Zaim also has achieved good relations with western interests. He quickly concluded agreements with the Trans-Arabian Pipe Line Co., expediting the new pipeline across Syria from Arabia; the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., and the French government.

Zaim won following among the peasants and laborers with new laws protecting labor. He ordered a drastic crackdown on crime.

His program of internal reforms has carried over to his own life. For the first time in Syria's history, her chief executive appears at official ceremonies without the traditional "tarbush," the red fez-like headdress of tradition.

Taking the hint, a number of Moslem women have abandoned their veils since he took power. Emancipated women now are confident they will be protected from fanatic religious teachers and reactionary parents.

2-Year Army Program

A lifetime soldier—he entered the Turkish army as a lieutenant in 1916—Zaim eyes Syria's small forces with a technician's eye. He hopes to increase the army from 27,000 to 50,000 men and make it the strongest in the Near East. He expects to do this in two years. Zaim is popular with the common soldiers.

He hopes to settle the Bedouin problem by bringing the nomads in out of the deserts and settling them in new agricultural villages.

In the troubled Middle East, Zaim's presence has solidified the split-up into two political blocs: Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria on one hand and Iraq and Trans-Jordan on the other. Zaim hopes for a revitalized Arab League which will weld the Arab states together politically again. Failing that, he reportedly would prefer alliances with Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Lebanon.

PRESIDENT HUSNI EL ZAIM
. . . Won over peasants and laborers

He strongly opposes the "fertile crescent" plan for a new nation combining Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Arab Palestine. Such a plan is supported by King Abdullah of Trans-Jordan.

Zaim's most open foe in the Arab world is Premier Nouri As-Said of Iraq. Zaim has called him a British agent.

Zaim has repeatedly expressed friendship for France, the United States and Turkey. He has said he will fight communism but has nothing against Soviet Russia.

He is suspicious of the British but says he favors good relations with them if Britain "takes a frank attitude toward Syria."

There is evidence that he leans more toward France than Britain, however.

Kremlin's 'Master Plan' Is Clicking in Bulgaria

By Edwin D. Grits

Post Reporter

POLITICAL events in Bulgaria since the death of Premier Georgi M. Dimitrov last July provide a clear although unpublicized example of how Soviet leaders intend to perpetuate Communist governments in satellite countries.

The first move, according to what is said to be the Kremlin's master plan, was to force the Communist-dominated national assembly to select a generally acceptable successor. In this case it was Deputy Premier Vasil Kolarov, Swiss-educated lawyer, who is admittedly popular and respected.

Kolarov's selection, however, is said to be secretly regarded by Soviet leaders as far from ideal, since the 72-year-old party veteran had been openly feuding for power with Old Faithful Dimitrov, while at the same time expressing ideas too independent for Moscow.

What's more, Kolarov is reliably reported to have been on the Kremlin's dreaded purge list up to quite recently for ignoring repeated suggestions to show greater deference to Moscow in his talks and writings.

Dimitrov's failing health, it seems, halted plans for Kolarov's liquidation, since it became apparent that only he could maintain some semblance of a united Communist front in Bulgaria until a Soviet stooge could be popularized sufficiently to take the reins without conflict.

Tardy Plaudits

MEANWHILE, Kolarov is being lauded throughout Bulgaria as Stalin's personal friend, an "eminent scientist," a great lawyer, a writer and an exponent of such profound economic truths that the Soviet Union had awarded him a doctor of economics degree.

While willingly assuming this suddenly heroic role, Kolarov is said to be deeply embittered because the recognition was belated. The fact is he was Dimitrov's predecessor as general secretary of the Bulgarian Communist Party. Likewise, he was an outstanding Communist before Dimitrov rose to fame in the old Communist Internationale.

As for Dimitrov himself, Kolarov is said to have scorned the former Premier's meager intellectual attainments. Dimitrov, in turn, was known to have hated and feared Kolarov. And for both it was a life of restrained hostility, ironically thrown together as far back as the abortive Bulgarian coup d'etat of 1923, then through many years in Moscow and finally as coworkers in Bulgaria.

Although fully aware of Kolarov's feelings, the Kremlin nevertheless bequeathed him Dimitrov's political mantle—realizing that the aging and ill Kolarov wouldn't last too long to become a party problem.

But as part of the Kremlin's apparatus for perpetuating Communist regimes, Soviet leaders simultaneously forced the approval of a hand-picked cabinet to guard against the remote possibility of Kolarov straying even a little. This watchdog cabinet had been established, in fact, at the onset of Dimitrov's illness under the guise of a "super cabinet" for national welfare.

The cabinet consists of such Communist luminaries as Vulko Chervenkov, Dimitrov's brother-in-law and principal aspirant for the premiership, who is in charge of science, art and culture—in effect, thought police, and Anton Yugov, internal affairs (state police).

A 3-Way Tussle

RECOGNIZED rivals of Chervenkov for top place in Bulgaria are Yugov and the ubiquitous Georgi I. Chankov, former head of the state planning commission and now sole dispenser of party patronage.

As the actual rulers of Bulgaria, unquestionably faithful to Moscow, these three are said to be waging subtle warfare among themselves of no less intensity than that of Kolarov and Dimitrov.

Chervenkov, according to recent reports, seems to have the edge because of his education and early political training while fawning around Dimitrov's villa near Moscow.

Chankov, former laborer, is reported to be a political fanatic who mistrusts educated party members, particularly Chervenkov, whom he regards as an opportunist. Generally speaking, he is said to have a strong following among party regulars but principally because of his patronage control rather than personal appeal.

Yugov, former Macedonian tobacco worker, also semi-literate, has won considerable favor from the Kremlin for his merciless and effective administration of the state police. He is also believed to control a secret police of 60,000 to 70,000 Russian nationals masquerading as Bulgarian citizens.

Unlike Chervenkov, Yugov and Chankov have had only brief Moscow training—Yugov in 1934 and Chankov from 1932 to 1934.

Yugov, as head of the security police, is said to be particularly feared. This fear stems from the fact that it was Yugov, according to Bulgarian reports, who primarily engineered the arrest of the former No. 2 Bulgarian Communist, Traicho Kostov, for anti-Sovietism and nationalism. Formerly first deputy premier under Dimitrov and head of economic planning, Kostov now is in jail awaiting trial.

Tito Lighted Fuse

WHILE the Kostov case is regarded as the outstanding recent example of inner party conflict, observers here attached added significance to it in the light of last Tuesday's appeal by Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia for the Bulgarian and Albanian people to overthrow their Soviet-bound Communist governments.

The importance of Marshal Tito's maneuver is said to be in the incendiary effect it will have on the many remaining anti-Soviet Communists in Bulgaria. The size of this force, it is stressed, can be gauged by the fact that at least 300 important dissidents have been arrested in the Kostov case alone.

As still another phase of the Kremlin's master plan, the Communist Party in Bulgaria, as elsewhere, has been stripped down within the last few months to a trusted force of about 500,000 activists, with some estimates placing the figure as low as 180,000.

As for official utterances, the pattern was well set by Kolarov when he accepted the premiership with such Soviet-soothing words as:

"Naturally the chief responsibility for the government of the country will be borne . . . by the Bulgarian Communist Party. But the government will give all possible support to the authority of the Fatherland Front, so indispensable for the moral and political unity of the Bulgarian people."

Latest statistics on the number of polio cases in each S tate, with increase or decrease from last year indicated

Less Crippling Is Only Gain in Polio

By Howard W. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK.—Children have had infantile paralysis since ancient times. Today a higher proportion recover without crippling.

This is the only gain, and it comes from better nursing, not from anything else.

Almost everyone has had polio, but only a few become sick. How the disease works in most of us who don't get ill is entirely unknown.

But what happens in the sick is well known. It is in your spinal cord. One set of nerves in this cord governs muscles. Polio chooses, for some mysterious reason, to attack these particular nerves and no others.

Among all nerves, these alone are unable to regenerate themselves. Once gone, they break the muscle-nerve cable for life. The muscles shrink. No other part of your body is damaged.

Polio can strike at any point along the spinal cable. If it hits high up, it paralyzes arms and hands. If in the mid-spine, polio hits the muscles of breathing. If low down, it paralyzes leg muscles.

There is an additional point of attack, in the "bulb," a rounded thing, half the size of a thumb, at the top of your spine. This location of polio brings most of the deaths.

The cause of polio is a virus, a very tiny particle of protein. How it does its destruction is unknown.

Two kinds of polio virus are known. More are suspected. You can have polio more than once, one attack for each kind of virus.

One in 300 Shows It

IN EPIDEMICS, those who recover without any bad effects range from 40 to 70 per cent. In epidemics, hardly more than one child in 300 gets visible polio. The highest susceptibility is from ages 4 to 9.

Nursing care, to help the body fight its own battle, is all that can be done in polio. There are two special aids. One is heat; the other, movement of stricken muscles. Both treat the paralyzed muscles and not the spinal cord cells. Nothing now known does any good for the stricken cells.

Early diagnosis—detecting the disease—is the most important single thing to be done, and the most difficult. The only scientific proof is to use spinal cord fluid to make a monkey sick. This test takes weeks and hundreds of dollars. A recent French test promises to do something similar with mice in two weeks. Both are too slow to help your child.

Keen doctors and nurses have to make the decision with the eyes of experience.

Carrier Is Unknown

THERE is no known way to keep from getting polio, but there are a lot of things you can do that might help.

The trouble is that no one knows how the viruses which cause the disease are carried from person to person. They are small enough to float in air, or to be carried by anything whatever.

Human beings almost certainly get the virus in what goes into their mouths. Their throats contain the virus when they are ill. If that were all, the breaking of the polio chain would be easier. But now comes the hard part.

You, the mother of a family, can have this disease without being sick, and you can give it to your child. The medical consensus now is that polio probably spreads from person to person, aided by something unknown.

Reduce the Odds

YOU and your children are likely to have polio virus in your systems during an epidemic. That leads to some of the things you can do.

Keep out of crowds. That lowers the odds a little.

Don't get chilled. Chilling has a technical meaning here. It is lowering your body temperature to the point where natural chemical reactions slow down. With this much chilling, polio infection gets a better chance to start.

Don't get fatigued. Fatigue lowers your body's resistance, too.

Keep clean. Obviously, hands, toys, anything in the house can harbor polio virus.

Stay out of polluted swimming waters. It is a verified fact that sewage has polio virus in an epidemic area. There is a chilling hazard, too, in swimming.

Swat flies. It is verified that they carry polio virus. But don't worry too much—remembering that many thousands of dollars' worth of research has failed to trace a single case of human polio to flies.

Watch headaches, sore throats, nausea, fevers, obscure pains and stiffness. That is the way a polio attack may start. Watching won't prevent polio, but it might catch those precious early hours of the illness and prevent some crippling.

Specialists Scarce

WHEN your child gets polio, his fate passes out of your hands. All you can do is to turn him over to specialists, and there are not many in the entire United States.

That's where the dimes you gave last winter come to your aid. They produced more than 20 million dollars, now ready to do the job of making this scarce aid available everywhere.

Your community has a local chapter of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, one of 2800 in the United States. Call the nearest Foundation office. They have plans ready. For those unable to pay the full expense, the Foundation expects to pay the balance. And that is a lot of money, about $1000 being average for a single case.

The Foundation undertakes to find a hospital where this care can be given. Where cases are numerous, the Foundation maintains teams of expert doctors and nurses to go to that area and train nurses and advise local doctors.

Some things which the experts will do can later be done at home by you. Where children are unable to move a muscle, nurses or parents or apparatus built for the purpose give them exercise. Someday the weakened muscles get able to do some of their own work.

Bulbar polio, the kind that comes from damage to the "bulb" at the top of the spinal cord, has lost some of its death-dealing power. Bulbar kills in several ways.

It may paralyze swallowing muscles or breathing muscles, or interfere with heart action. In the swallowing trouble, the child chokes to death. Opening the windpipe saves most of these, and that was discovered only two years ago. Iron lungs keep them alive in the breathing paralysis and pure oxygen helps tide over the heart crises.

The doctors may give the sufferer myanesin of priscol to relieve pain, but not because they think there is any curative effect. They use curare to loosen muscles that tie themselves into knots. There are more than a score of medicines being used on animals, with powerful effects, and two vaccines for animals. Whether any of these will work for human beings is unknown.

The best and only remedies go under the broad name of physiotheraphy, which means long, patient and affectionate care in teaching stricken muscles to make a comeback.

First Election Finds Reich Apathetic

HANNOVER, Germany (NYHT). — The strongest political group in Germany today from a standpoint of organization, internal stability, leadership and policy is, by common consent, the Social Democratic Party (SPD), which has headquarters here.

When Germans go to the polls next Sunday to cast their first free national election ballots since Hitler's rise to power in 1933, it is probable that about 75 per cent of the total vote will be split more or less equally between the SPD and Germany's other major political group—the Christian Democratic Union (CDU).

On the side of the CDU in what has so far been a disappointingly vacuous political campaign is the leadership of respected, intelligent and honorable democrats, mostly from the Weimar Republic days; the innate conservatism of the German people; the Catholic Church, which is openly and strongly backing the CDU, and the money of the Ruhr industrialists.

Because it is an amalgamation of political groups of the right or center more or less under one leadership, the CDU cannot begin to match the machine organization of the SPD. Yet for all the organizational superiority, SPD leaders are the last to claim much more than a slight edge over their right-wing opponents, and certainly not a sufficient edge to emerge strong enough to form a government.

Over the present apathy and indifference of the electorate, a party official expressed some concern—particularly because he feared that apathy might mean that German voters are simply waiting for strong, nationalist leadership from the right.

Elder Statesman Hoover, at 75, Still Growing in Public Esteem

By Cynthia Lowry

News Feature Writer

THE Nation's only living former President arrives at the three-quarter century mark ursday, still a hard-working public official. At the moment, Herbert Hoover is enjoy- a brief respite from his 18-hour-a-day . His birthday finds Hoover in the sur- undings he loves best: the campus of his ma mater, Leland Stanford University, with ne for a little fishing with his children and andchildren.

For some years he has declined personal terviews and has made public statements ly concerning his major interests, notably e Republican Party and the work of the npartisan Commission on Organization of e Executive Branch of Government, of hich he is chairman.

He is in excellent health, in good spirits d enjoys life. The round-faced man who rsists in looking like a thoughtful cherub spite great personal dignity has come a ng way in popularity since the day in 1933 left the White House in defeat in the idst of a great depression.

After that he dropped from political sight r a couple of years. From his New York eadquarters he went to work on jobs that terested him: trustee of a number of phil- thropic organizations and directing work scientific and service groups.

He fished a little and traveled a lot. Event- lly he emerged from his political retire- ent to become a forthright and highly vocal ritic of his successor's New Deal. Particu- rly of Government interference in private usiness.

arty Elder Statesman

E HAS been an important speaker at his party's national conventions. In Phila- lphia last year, when the Republicans were certain they were about to return to power, the spontaneous demonstration for Hoover was almost as loud and prolonged as the care- fully planned whoop-de-do staged for men who sought the party nomination.

His position as party elder statesman is strong. A visit with Hoover in his New York home—an apartment in the Waldorf-Astoria —is prescribed conduct for party men aspir- ing to important position.

Herbert Hoover, however, never has been a political prototype. The only political office he ever sought or ran for was that of Presi- dent. An engineer by training, practice and aptitude, Hoover made his mark by his ad- ministrative skill. Latterly he has used this in steering the work of the Hoover commis- sion in studying the Executive Branch of the Government to reorganize its sprawling authority.

It is an interesting sidelight on the char- acter of the Nation's thirtieth President (or thirty-first, if you count Grover Cleveland twice) that there are few anecdotes concern- ing him—nothing to compare with the end- less Coolidge and Roosevelt stories. The popular picture of the man is of a quiet, thoughtful person, long on formality and even shy in a poised way.

Chinese Government Job

HIS LIFE is in the Horatio Alger pattern. An orphan at 10, he was self-supporting at 15. Using his savings, Hoover was one of the first students to matriculate at Stanford. Graduating in 1895 with a degree in mining engineering, he went to work with a pick and shovel in the mines.

Established in Australia as an engineer, he married the girl he met at Stanford, Lou Henry. They went to China, where Hoover was chief engineer for the Chinese Depart- ment of Mines.

Those were exciting years, punctuated by the Boxer Rebellion. He returned to the United States to set up an international engineering practice with offices over the world. By 1914 he was a hugely successful man, directing railways, mining and allied industries which employed as many as 160,- 000 men.

On a trip to London in 1914, he organized the repatriation of thousands of Americans, caught like himself in World War I. He headed the administration of relief for thou- sands of Belgians and French.

President Woodrow Wilson appointed him Food Administrator when the United States entered the war, and the word "Hooverize" went into the American language. After the war, Specialist Hoover was named to head the Allied administration of relief, whose activities eventually brought supplies to 23 war-impoverished countries.

President Warren G. Harding appointed him Secretary of Commerce, a post he held for eight years. From there he went into the White House on a landslide of Republican votes during an unprecedented boom.

Chilled by the Reaction

BUT THE boom blew up. Always a hard worker, Hoover sometimes spent 20 hours a day at his desk in his efforts to halt the decline. Nevertheless, he caught the lion's share of blame.

As his popularity waned his round face became grimmer and his manner more re- mote. Even his closest associates found him cold.

What people fondly called the "new Hoover" began to emerge a couple of years after he left Washington. People started talking about his humor, his friendliness.

Hoover's real niche in the esteem of the people today, however, is his measured and thoughtful approach to the Nation's problems.

He summed up his philosophy a few weeks ago in an address at Ohio Wesleyan Uni- versity (where he was made a doctor of humanities, his seventy-fifth honorary de- gree):

"The new era of today seems united in the notion that they have just discovered real liberalism and that all previous eras are re- actionary," Hoover said. "Another mod- ernistic school adds to this that life still may be a race but that each step must be dictated by some official or unofficial bureaucrat with stop-and-go signals.

"Whether these newest eras are right or wrong, 'security' which eliminates the risks of life also kills the joy that lies in competi- tion, in individual adventure, new undertak- ings and new achievements. These contain moral and intellectual impulses more vital than even profits. For from them alone comes national progress."

Wadleigh Begins to Pay for 'Feeding' Spy Ring

By Henry Julian Wadleigh

This is the third Sunday instalment of the story of Henry Julian Wadleigh, for- mer State Department economist who told the Alger Hiss jury that he diverted secret Government documents to a Soviet spy ring in 1936-37. Wadleigh has told earlier how, after wavering among various ideol- ogies, he tied up with the Communists because of their militant opposition to hated Fascism. Through a friend, Jane B., he met a spy ring contact, Harold, and later another contact, Carl, who has turned out to be Whittaker Chambers. Early in 1939, Chambers stunned Wad- leigh with the revelation that Chambers had "deserted" the spy ring and the party. The story continues:

EARLY IN 1939, after Whittaker Chambers had told me of his desertion, I called ane, the woman who had first put me in uch with the Soviet spy network in Wash- gton. I wanted to warn Harold that our riend, Carl (Chambers), couldn't be trusted ny more.

But Jane had lost the magic power she ad possessed to make Harold appear from owhere. Instead, she met me herself, and told her the story.

We speculated about what could have gone n in Chambers' mind. Jane said it took on nerves to do what he was doing, and he thought he must have broken under the train. She concluded our meeting by ask- g me to be sure to let her know if Cham- ers tried to contact me again, and mean- me, she said, she would try to contact the pparatus and pass on the information I ad given her.

Some time later, when I was sitting at my esk in the office, the phone rang. Someone the other end of the line said something did not understand in a voice I did not ecognize. It seemed rather incoherent.

"Who's this, please?" I asked.

"Carl! Carl! Carl! CARL!" His voice rose a hysterical scream. "D'you want me to tarve?" He asked me to meet him in Jack- on Place immediately.

Jackson Place! Was the man completely razy? Why, that was a mere stone's throw rom the State Department. Appointments ith my underground contacts had never een anywhere in the neighborhood of the epartment.

I tried to think quickly. If I went to meet im, would I find him flanked by FBI agents? Well, if he was really in danger of starving nd I refused to help, that was just the very hing that would drive him to the FBI.

old About Expose

I WALKED out to meet him. He was alone, and he started by asking me for a loan f $10. I opened my wallet. It contained ne $20 bill and a few ones. I handed him he $20. He thanked me and put it in his ocket.

Then he told me that he had been talking o someone he had known in the Soviet in- elligence service who, he said, was writing series of articles for the Saturday Evening ost exposing the whole system.

I wished him good luck, and returned to he State Department. As I walked back I uttered through clenched teeth: "I hope never, never, never see that man again."

I imagine that very few people in this world are capable of blackmail. Certainly Whittaker Chambers is not a man of that ype, or anything like it. But when people ave given a person the label of traitor, hey are usually ready to suspect that per- on of any and all crimes. At that time here was, in my imagination, no depth of legradation too deep for Chambers.

And so a terrifying picture loomed up in my mind of him coming around regularly nce a week to me and to each of his other ources—I had no idea how many there might be—and collecting his $10 bill. He might even become brazen enough one day o walk straight into my office.

Hysterical Fantasy

I MADE another appointment with Jane and told her about the $20 bill. My heory about weekly blackmail alarmed her. When I told her about the Saturday Evening Post articles, she was even more alarmed. She said she still had not succeeded in con- tacting the apparatus, but she would, and said she would see to it that I got my $20 back.

Meanwhile, for a week or two, every time my phone rang at the office I picked up the receiver in fear that it might be Chambers. But he never approached me again. My idea about blackmail had been nothing more than a hysterical fantasy. In fact, he had just come to an old friend for help when he was desperate.

Jane called and made another appoint- ment. She told me that she still had not been able to contact the apparatus and had given up trying.

"They just seem to have vanished," she said.

Since the apparatus thought it unsafe to have any contacts with us, we thought it best that we should not take the risk of be- ing seen together. There was no question in my mind that sooner or later I would be contacted again. In one way or another I would still be able to do something useful. But for the present, there was nothing to do but be, as Chambers had put it, a "bourgeois."

An Easy-Going Manner

MEANWHILE, I was doing well at the office. Interesting and significant work was being assigned to me. I learned through grapevine channels that people were saying a remarkable change had come over Wad- leigh since his Turkish trip. He was easy to get along with. For me that was a great triumph.

I had applied self-discipline and self-training to overcome my worst handicap. I had cultivated a casual, easy-going manner in conferences and discussions connected with my work; I had taught myself the art of agreeing and giving in on inconsequential details; and now my efforts were showing real results. I forgot my dislike of working in the State Department.

One evening in August, leaving the office quite a while after closing time, I happened to meet Herbert Feis, then economic adviser in the department. He told me the Russians had made a nonaggression pact with Hitler.

My first reaction was deathly fear that it might be true. I asked him if it was a well- authenticated report or just some rumor that one of our diplomats had gleaned over cock- tails. He insisted that it was a fact. I went home feeling as if the earth had become fluid under my feet.

The next morning it was in the papers. This time it was not just Chambers, it was nothing less than the Soviet Union. Further- more, the Soviet Union had not just deserted, it had, apparently, sold out to the enemy.

The pact was one of the most disastrous events in my lifetime, at least—and certainly a disastrous event in my own life in that fateful time.

I had been confident in my own ability to understand the trend in world affairs. I had trusted my own judgment enough to make real sacrifices on the basis of my own political thinking. Now, from the looks of things in 1939, it seemed that I had been a fool.

"Carl," or Whittaker Chambers, as sketched by Mrs. Quentin Roosevelt

Disillusioned Internationalist

FORTUNATELY, there was plenty of work to do at the State Department. Urgent business saved me from emotional brooding. Then I recovered from the shock and began to think again.

The more I thought about the pact, the more reasonable it looked. The Soviet was in danger of an attack from Germany and Japan. The indications, up to the time of the pact, were that such an attack would receive economic support from the West. I concluded that the Russian leaders had been compelled to make the pact, in sheer self- preservation. If I had been in their shoes, I thought, I would have done the same thing.

Nevertheless, I was not in their shoes. I had undertaken to collaborate because I be- lieved that the Communist movement was the only world force effectively resisting fascism and military aggression. Now it was no longer that. Furthermore, world commu- nism was now showing itself to be nothing more than a tail to the Soviet kite. It was under the leadership of the men in the Krem- lin, and their primary responsibility was the defense of their own country.

Harold had once told me that one of his main reasons for trusting me was that I was a genuine internationalist. Now it was no longer a good reason.

At times I managed to argue myself into something like acceptance of the Communist line. But as the months went by the con- viction grew in me that I would never again undertake any line of action that would require submitting to Communist Party discipline.

Less than a year after the Nazi-Soviet pact I went through a crisis in my private life —my wife and I were divorced. For some months the only thing that sustained me was a vague feeling that somehow, sometime, I would get my life straightened out.

During that period of deepest gloom Harold called me for the last time. He called at about 6 o'clock one evening and asked me to meet him for dinner. I was glad to have a chance to talk to Harold again, simply on the basis of personal friendship.

We met at a roadside restaurant just out- side the Capital. I left my car in front of the place and looked around for Harold, first outside, then inside. Then I waited at the door. Finally, I gave up and went back to the car. Just as I was turning the door handle, Harold appeared, from where I didn't know.

After the usual greetings, I said: "Let's go inside and eat."

He shook his head. "I've had my dinner. Let's drive out in the country."

So we drove out in the country. I won- dered whether these extreme precautions might be based on possible suspicion of my- self, but I did not ask Harold.

Our conversation must have been very disappointing to Harold. I discussed my personal problems at great length. When we came to politics I let him feel my mood of disillusionment without expressing it di- rectly. We did not argue. No doubt he realized, as well as I did, that argument would be senseless.

A Cultivated Accent

IN spite of all my gloom, there was one point, involving Whittaker Chambers, on which my curiosity was still active. What was his nationality? Now I could ask.

"Why, his family has been in this country for generations," Harold said.

"Really? Then where'd he get that aston- ishing accent?"

"I don't know. Must've cultivated it."

"Do you know what he's doing now?"

"He's working for a magazine."

Then I asked Harold what he, himself, was doing. He replied tartly, "I'm in the labor movement," and his manner told me it was an impertinence for me to ask.

I drove him back to where I had met him. As he stepped out of the car, he asked, "Shall I get in touch with you again?"

"You might as well," I replied, but my tone of voice said, "Oh, what's the use?"

Around the end of 1940, prospects began to look brighter, and for the next year or two my life ran quite smoothly. My work in the State Department was going well, and I was getting promotions. My work was connected with preparations for a peace set- tlement, and I had hopes of contributing something useful toward a peace that would last. I began to think of my work in the department as a lifelong career, and my per- sonal troubles were ended when I married again and settled down to a happy family life.

A Feeling of Guilt

BUT it was not so easy to drop the past, the years of siphoning State Department papers to the Communists. One part of my trouble was a lingering fear that Chambers might tell his story to the authorities. But that was not too serious.

Far more important, I believe now as I look back, was something akin to a feeling of guilt, of which I was not fully conscious. My underground work, while it lasted, had given me a sense of importance. Now all that had gone, and instead I was weighed down by the realization that it had all been a ghastly mistake. My youthful enthusiasm to help the world had faded, and sometimes I asked myself reproachfully whether I was degenerating into a mere careerist.

Then began a long series of frustrations. Whenever I had a good idea—or one that seemed good to me—I found my suggestions vetoed by somebody higher up in the bureau- cratic hierarchy. And then, late in 1942, a promotion I had expected to a position with real scope went to another man.

I became more and more disgusted, not only with the State Department but with the whole of Washington. Most of my work during the critical years of 1941 and 1942 had been a sheer waste of time. Now I wanted to do something practical about an immediate problem, and do it where I could see the results of my work. I applied for an assignment to Italy, which our armies then were invading. In December, 1943, I was flown over to work with the Allied Control Commission as a civilian expert.

The Two Basic Problems

IN Italy I learned what can happen to a country when its population is seriously short of food. I became convinced that peace and food were the world's two basic prob- lems.

Nevertheless, the trip to Italy gave me no escape from frustration. I found myself en- meshed once again in a tangle of bureau- cratic inhibitions. This long period of frus- tration finally came to an end on May 16, 1946, the day I started work in the Food Division of UNRRA.

Here was an opportunity to do really valuable work toward solving the two basic world problems of that moment: food for the starving across the seas, and the problem of peace, for UNRRA was by far the great- est achievement in international coopera- tion that the world had ever seen.

I want it understood, because I know the public was misled into believing that this great agency was run largely by Communists or Communist sympathizers, that my under- ground activities in the Soviet espionage network in Washington were never known to any UNRRA official. If the secret were known, I most certainly would have been fired.

Too High a Price

IN any case, my UNRRA job was temporary, and when it ended in April, 1947, I decided to earn my living as a free-lance writer. I had paid too high a price for the security, or apparent security, of a Federal Government job.

I had started working on a novel in my spare time while I was in UNRRA. After that, every day for a year, I worked on the novel in my basement. Finally I had a com- plete draft of the book, and very little money. I sent the draft to a literary agent and went to look for a job.

The first I was offered paid me consider- ably less than I would have earned in the Government, but I liked the people I had to work with, and I felt that the work was useful. I was helping to get food for Italy, mostly under the Marshall Plan, as an em- ployee of the Italian Technical Delegation, an office of the Italian government in Wash- ington. Meanwhile, I continued writing in my spare time.

Not long after I took this job, the House Committee on Un-American Activities started publicizing accusations of Communist espi- onage.

First came Elizabeth Bentley's sensational charges. These in themselves caused me no concern. I had never heard of her be- fore, and if any of the things she described in the committee's klieg-lighted room had actually happened, I had no knowledge of it. Nevertheless, it made me nervous to read about these things.

The committee might conceivably get my former friend, Whittaker Chambers, to tell his story in public, and even though my underground activities were now more than 10 years old, it would be no joke to have them brought out into the open when the country was going through an acute phase of anti-Communist and anti-Soviet hysteria.

One morning I saw in one of the Wash- ington papers a large headline to the effect that Whittaker Chambers had accused a former State Department official of being a Communist. And there, on the front page, was a picture of "Carl" himself. It was a perfect likeness of the Carl I had known, and I recognized it immediately. I started read- ing, anxiously. No mention of my name yet. I turned to where the report was continued on a back page. Still no mention of my name. What a relief! Chambers had made his accusation against Alger Hiss, of all people!

That surprised me. I had seen something of Hiss when I was in the State Department; not enough to make more than a rather su- perficial acquaintance, but enough to get a distinct impression of the kind of man that he was. I regarded him as a very moderate New Dealer with strongly conservative in- stincts. Well, I thought, if he was one of Chambers' sources, he certainly had more skill than I in concealing his views.

The committee hearings passed without my name being mentioned. It seemed prac- tically certain that the attack on Hiss had died for lack of evidence. From my stand- point, this looked good. If they could prove nothing against Hiss, it seemed un- likely that they would attack me. Now, I thought, at long last I can forget the whole thing.

But it was only the curtain on the first act. Hiss challenged Chambers to repeat his charges outside the committee room, where he would have no immunity against a libel suit. Chambers did so, and chal- lenged Hiss to sue him. Hiss did so.

Then Chambers produced a stack of docu- ments at the pretrial examination connected with Hiss' suit. To me that was very bad news. Immediately afterward investigators of the House committee hotfooted it over to Chambers' farm, and there Chambers led them out by flashlight to the famous pumpkin.

I regarded this as a most nauseating pub- licity stunt. I was disgusted with Chambers. I felt that he had acted wrongly in giving the pumpkin films to the committee and not to the Justice Department.

Danger in Denial

BUT the appearance of these films had im- portant implications for me. Up to that time I had intended to deny any charges that Chambers might make against me. This was not due to any feelings of loyalty to the Com- munists, for I no longer had any such feelings.

I simply felt that in the interests of my family and myself I could not afford to do anything but deny the charges. After spend- ing a whole year writing a novel, I had prac- tically no savings left, except what I had put into my house.

I felt that my story could be of no practical value to the authorities, being more than 10 years old, and in any case I knew very little about the apparatus with which I had worked.

But now that Chambers had produced doc- umentary evidence, the situation looked dif- ferent from the standpoint of personal in- terest. Possibly some of those documents had been furnished by me, and might even be traced back to me. Under the statute of limitations, I could not be prosecuted for espionage, but if I denied something that could be proved I might be prosecuted for perjury.

They were not calm thoughts. The whole country was in an uproar. The words "trai- tor" and "treason" were peppered over the pages of the newspapers and flying through the air.

If something like this had happened in 1936 or 1937, when I was actually engaged in underground work, I would have derived some moral support from the conviction that I was acting rightly. At that time I was de- liberately taking a risk. But now I had no convictions to give me moral support. My troubles resulted from past actions which I had already regretted.

NEXT SUNDAY: Conclusion. Two FBI agents walk into Wadleigh's office and tell him that Chambers has accused him of con- nections with the spy ring. He tells them most of the story, sparing only Jane B. Then he has to repeat his story to a New York grand jury. Back in Washington, Wadleigh is served with a House Un-American Activities Com- mittee subpoena. He is taken to a "closed" hearing which is abruptly turned into an open one with "a fence of cameras" around him. Then he appears again before the New York grand jury, where he learns "Harold's" real identity, and finally he is a witness at the Hiss trial. He concludes his story with a resume of his present views on Soviet Russia and the American Communist Party.

Two studies of Elizabeth Bentley as she touched off the "spy ring" in- vestigation with her testimony be- fore the House Un-American Activ- ities Committee. Her charges, "in themselves, caused me no concern," says Wadleigh. But "it made me nervous to read about these things"

Taxes Take $1 of Every $4.10 Earned

By Sigrid Arne

Associated Press Staff Writer

THIS YEAR the average Ameri- can is paying out $1 in Fed- eral, State and local taxes for every $4.10 he earns.

Roughly, that means that every time he earns a dollar he turns over 25 cents to a tax agent.

This estimate, by Senator Byrd (D., Va.), is making fighting words behind the scenes in Washington. Sixty-two Senators, despairing of economy by this Congress, have proposed that Federal expenses be cut 10 per cent by the Presi- dent.

These Senators are uncertain how the House will react to their plan. They say the real issue is "easy money"—that is, Congress- men are willing to vote money to please certain groups of citizens without any regard for the over- all solvency of the National Gov- ernment. Needless to say, the Senators who make these remarks refuse to be quoted by name.

The battle over Government spending has become stiff enough that the President went on the radio to explain his last economic report. This was the first time he had done so since the eco- nomic reports started in January, 1947.

He said that Government should "direct its policies toward continued economic expansion." He suggested several programs which would take more Govern- ment spending, such as wider Social Security programs, more money for education, health and housing, more money for preser- vation of national resources.

Bureau-Size Job

MR. TRUMAN'S major oppon- ent in Congress is a member of his own party—Senator Byrd. Byrd's small staff almost dupli- cated the work of the entire Budget Bureau in preparation for his last Senate talk on Govern- ment finance.

Byrd's report compared tax costs in 1941 and 1949. Here is what his staff found:

In 1941 the tax bill to Uncle Sam alone was $7,250,000,000. The year after the war that had jumped to $36,500,000,000. If the President's program went through, Byrd said, the bill would be 43 billion dollars and the av- erage for Federal, State and local taxes would be $1 for approxi- mately $3.50 earned.

Taxes to Uncle Sam—never mind taxes to State and city—have jumped more than five times since the start of the war. Can we afford it? That depends, ac- cording to Byrd, on what we are turning out in the way of work.

The President's report says we were turning it out only twice as fast this spring as we did in the spring of 1941—at an annual rate of 250 billion dollars, com- pared to 125 billion dollars in 1941. So five times as much taxes have to be taken out of only twice as much work.

But the work record isn't hold- ing up. Our peak was in the last half of 1948, when we turned out goods worth $262,700,000,000. Byrd points out that when we turn out less goods as a people, we have less taxes to pay and Uncle Sam collects less. So for the last half year Uncle Sam has had to face lower taxes although Congress, under the Administra- tion's drive, has been planning to spend more.

Here's how the Byrd research- ers estimated what some of the President's proposals would mean:

EDUCATION—The President asked 414 million for education and research. This is almost seven times the expenditures in 1941, and that doesn't include the Government expenses for educating GIs after the war.

NATURAL RESOURCES—The President asked $1,900,000,000 for preservation of natural re- sources. It is more than five times the 1941 amount.

CONTROLS AND PROMO- TION OF FINANCE INDUSTRY —The President asked 107 mil- lion dollars. This is 33 times greater than the same bill for 1941.

There is still no estimate of the amount Congress may decide to spend on arming western Europe.

Explaining ERP

The terms of the Economic Cooperation Agreements oblige the recipients of Marshall aid to publicize among their own people the objectives and progress of ERP. The importance of this aspect of the program hardly needs emphasis. Quite apart from the need of refuting Communist slander against the Marshall Plan, the aim of American aid must be generally understood in Europe if the program is to succeed. This is not a selfish desire on the part of the American donor for grateful recognition that Uncle Sam is a generous gentleman. Gratitude builds no economic foundations for recovery. What does build those foundations is work—work in Europe, by Europeans, for European prosperity—and the driving feeling that the Europeans must become independent of American bounty. Both are encouraged as the mass of Europeans realize what the United States is doing.

ECA reports to Congress show an increasing sense of awareness among the people in Europe of what is involved. In each of the three semiannual reports so far delivered, the space devoted to public information in Europe has grown. The third report shows how the European governments are expanding their own public information. A case in point is Holland. The Netherlands government recently issued a small illustrated leaflet on what ECA is doing for Holland of which a million copies are said already to have been distributed. It is both a simple and hard-hitting item for popular consumption, and its conclusion carries the salient lesson of the Marshall Plan: "Through Marshall aid Europe obtains the tools that enable her to build her future. But tools alone are not sufficient. Whether European recovery will succeed depends most of all on the use the 270 million Europeans make of these tools. Even America cannot do more than supply the tools, the work must be done by Europe."

Rise In Idleness

Optimism regarding the business outlook has recently taken the place of pessimism. Even the announcement that unemployment in July topped four million to reach the highest level since January, 1942, has brought few cries of dismay. On the contrary, the significance of this report is being minimized by putting emphasis on the rise in the volume of employment this year from June to July.

While The Washington Post has frequently decried the tendency to exaggerate the depressing effect of increasing unemployment and declining production in a period of readjustment, we think it would be a mistake to underrate the seriousness of the present unemployment problem. Although there are signs of a business upturn that, as it progresses, will doubtless provide a larger number of jobs, the sharp rise in unemployment that has resulted from what is now officially described as a moderate business recession is not to be lightly dismissed. The unemployment total is 1,868,000 higher than it was a year ago, while the number of people employed is 1,895,000 below the level of a year ago. Nonfarm employment dropped 2,400,000 during the year, although this decline was partially offset by a rise of almost half a million in farm employment, indicating a shift of some laid-off workers from factory to farm.

Keeping in mind the fact that every year large numbers of new job-seekers enter the labor market, it is obvious that more jobs have to be provided each year to prevent unemployment from rising. Part-time work is a form of partial unemployment that also has to be taken into account, since it results in loss of wages and reduction of consumer purchasing power. It is also essential to identify the industries chiefly responsible for unemployment and the localities hardest hit by its incidence. Employment in New England's textile mills, for instance, dropped 25 per cent between April, 1948, and April, 1949. Since then the decline has been halted and latest reports indicate considerable improvement, although unemployment is still very high. New York State, with nearly 600,000 persons drawing unemployment insurance benefits, is also hard hit, and Governor Dewey has ordered State public works projects to be speeded up in order to provide jobs for the idle.

While localized slumps of this kind do not necessarily lead to Nation-wide unemployment on a serious scale, they undoubtedly hold back recovery and inflict great hardship on the people of depressed areas. Consequently it is important to study unemployment data not merely as an index of the state of business throughout the country, but with reference to its industrial and regional incidence. That the Government is now doing, in cooperation with local officials and citizen groups, with a view to increasing its own buying and construction activities in distressed areas.

U. S. As A Creditor

Mr. Truman recently said that the development of a freer system of world trade calls for positive action on our part—specifically, extension of executive authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements and establishment of a permanent international organization to apply standards of fair dealing among trading nations.

Failure to extend the provisions of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act would certainly create grave misgivings abroad as to the sincerity of our desire to lower tariff barriers. For that reason Senate Administration leaders should press for action before adjournment. The pressure should also take the form of a crusade by public men headed by the President in behalf of the assumption by this country of the responsibilities of a creditor nation. The people have developed the psychology of world power, but they still lack the psychology of creditors, and this is due to lack of leadership. A creditor must take his payments in goods and services, or he will be faced with default, repudiation and chaos among his debtors, as is the case today. To be sure, there would be dislocations in American industry as a result of such a change, but the dislocations could be prevented from injuring the affected Americans by a wise policy along some such lines as have been advocated by Winfield W. Riefler in a brochure put out by the Council on Foreign Relations.

Ratification of the ITO charter, on the other hand, is not so imperative. For, as The Washington Post stated more than a year ago when the charter was signed by our representatives at Havana, "the ultimate aim of the agreement to remove the shackles from world trade will not be attainable for a long time to come."

Indeed, the charter bristles with so-called "scape" clauses that allow restrictive and discriminatory trade practices to continue during the postwar transition period. Then, too, as Calvin B. Hoover pointed out when the ITO was under discussion at the last annual meeting of the American Economic Association, so long as the United States continues to provide dollars to cover deficits in the balance of payments of western European nations the provisions of the charter are "unlikely to be of much importance in determining the character of international trade." As he says the decisions made in placing dollars at the disposal of ERP countries for purchases of specific commodities almost completely override the effect of ordinary trade barriers or the lack of them.

Many provisions of the charter, moreover, are considered weak or defective even by those experts who approve its long-range objective: the development of a comprehensive code of fair practices applicable to international trade. The CED report on the ITO charter affords a typical example of the kind of half-hearted indorsement that provides the opposition with ammunition for attack. The conclusion reached after a discursive and rather superficial analysis is that "the malpractices which the charter fails to correct would in any case continue to exist even if the charter were not to come into force." However, stress is laid on the potential (italics ours) value of the instrument as a "forum for the reconciliation and accommodation of conflicting national views regarding trade policy matters." And its ratification is recommended, provided certain provisions dealing with international investment problems are eliminated because they do not give American investors adequate protection against arbitrary and discriminatory action by foreign governments. Even this qualified indorsement is weakened by the vigorous dissenting views of a number of industrialists and bankers who are members of the CED Research and Policy Committee.

Since various other influential business groups and trade organizations are on record as opposed to the charter, or have indorsed it with reservations, the stage is set for a battle when the proposal comes before Congress. Extensive hearings are required to thresh out differences of opinion, and prolonged debate will follow when the proposal to ratify comes before Congress. The present congested state of the legislative calendar makes it virtually certain, therefore, that the pact will not be acted on at this session.

Survival In A Crowd

Despite the fears of population experts, nobody will have to starve even if the world keeps on becoming an ant hill. This assurance comes from Prof. Eugene G. Rochow, who recently received the biennial Leo Hendrick Backeland Award of the New Jersey section of the American Chemical Society. Professor Rochow even thinks the world could support a population of 15 billion if—

We started growing trees on a large scale for food (chemistry would take care of converting cellulose into digestible substances); stopped eating meat and eggs, which require large land support, and got along with plant proteins and fish; mass produced proteins in factories from "fixed nitrogen"; made butter and other edible fats from coal; recovered the carbon dioxide being steadily soaked up by oceans; gave up "hot dogs" and ice cream because they make too heavy inroads on the natural food supply; made clothes of cellulose, shoe leather of plastic, sugar from discarded rayon clothing; built houses of ceramics rather than wood or steel; drove railroads and ships by atomic power.

Oh, yes, and one other little thing! In order for these miracles to be accomplished the world would have to stabilize itself politically and economically.

Narrowing The Issue

The statements by Cardinal Spellman and Mrs. Roosevelt do not dispose of their basic differences on the use of public funds to aid sectarian schools. But the Cardinal has sensibly eliminated the heat and the intemperate tone which characterized his recent denunciation of the former First Lady. The discussion is once more centered on the real issues, and Mrs. Roosevelt has characterized the new statement of Cardinal Spellman's views as "clarifying and fair." It would be idle to suppose that the acrimony resulting from the Cardinal's previous statement can thus be wiped out, but at least this conciliatory gesture should help to lift the aid-to-education bill out of the morass of religious controversy in which it has become entangled.

Undoubtedly Cardinal Spellman's statement also helps to narrow the area of controversy. He says flatly: "We are not asking for general public support of religious schools . . . We believe in Federal aid for needy States and needy children." What he seeks is a guarantee from Congress that the funds it makes available to the States for "auxiliary services"—transportation of children to and from school, the purchase of nonsectarian textbooks and health aids—will be distributed without discrimination against the children in sectarian schools. This would necessitate amendment of the Thomas bill passed by the Senate to make mandatory upon the States what, under that measure, would be only permissive.

Of course, no such amendment will be adopted. It seems to us that Cardinal Spellman's reasoning breaks down when he attempts to lump school lunches, health aids, textbooks and bus transportation to school in the same category. In providing lunches and health services for children, Congress is solely concerned with their physical well-being. These programs have only a remote relation to education. Certainly all children should be included in the benefits regardless of what school they attend. Transportation to school and textbooks, as we noted the other day, are somewhat more closely related to education. Congress could not begin dictating to the States as to what they should do with funds made available for these purposes without running afoul of another vital principle—local control over education. The whole effort to buttress the schools with Federal funds would topple if Congress should begin to invade this field of local policy-making. And rightly so. Congress has gone as far as it can go in the Thomas bill, which leaves the States free to grant or to deny Federal funds for school bus service and nonsectarian textbooks.

We hope that the President's conference with congressional leaders last week will result in a House vote on the Thomas bill. That measure recognizes that the fundamental principle of separation of church and state is well established and will not be imperiled by letting the States shape their own policies within a narrow twilight zone.

Julian The Apostate

The frank and unabashed confessions of Mr. Julian Wadleigh, now appearing in our Sunday editions, afford some interesting glimpses into the psychology of that curiously modern variant of homo sapiens, the intellectual. One characteristic of the intellectual is the agonizing responsibility that appears to weigh upon him for the condition of the world. He seems to be forever repeating to himself that

> The time is out of joint—O cursed spite
> That ever I was born to set it right.

What never seems to occur to him is the salutary afterthought that perhaps he was not born to set it right. Seldom, apparently, does he ask himself what reasons he has for supposing that the condition of the world will be better for his personal intervention in the processes of history.

Thus in the late 1930s, when Mr. Wadleigh was working and teaching in the Department of Agriculture, he felt like one "in an upper room of a building already cracked by an earthquake." The building evidently represented Western civilization and the earthquake the rise of fascism.

> Something drastic had to be done, and
> I felt there was need for me to help.
> But what should I do? I had no idea.

Some men when they find themselves in such a situation just do nothing. Others try to take their minds off the problem by just going ahead with the job they are being paid for doing. But for some reason neither of these courses ever satisfies an intellectual. Mr. Wadleigh resolved his doubts and eased his distress, and presently was snitching secret Government reports for Mr. Chambers' spy ring. Not until a few years later, when he learned of Mr. Chambers' defection from the party, did it occur to Mr. Wadleigh that perhaps he wasn't cut out after all for the business of international revolutionary conspiracy. He was for one thing much too trustful of others. We may add that he had also been, like most intellectuals, much, much too trustful of himself.

AUTUMNAL

From the low cadence of the autumn day
I, too, have caught
Grim prophecies undreamed; ideals unthought,
And over them, across the windy bay,
Seen writ in cloud,
A cold wind stirs me, and the red leaves fall;
And in the failing light
The twilight and the silence fill the night,
A single star writes finis to it all.

Bridges And The UMW

Disclosure that Senator Bridges is receiving a fat retainer from the United Mine Workers suggests the desirability of amending the lobby law so as to require the pressure politicians within Congress to register and reveal the sources and amounts of their income from organized and group interests. Many Congressmen themselves are little more than lobbyists in disguise for special interests at home. They pretend to be spokesmen for the national interest, or for their constituents as a whole, but in fact they are acting for this or that pressure group.

If the pressure boys outside must register, why should not the pressure politicians inside Congress also be required to disclose their group affiliations?

HOWARD ANDERSON.
Washington.

Much has been said and made of Senator Bridges' $35,000 job as one of U. M. W.'s welfare trustees. There has been no attempt on the part of the Senator to conceal the fact.

A great percentage of the members of Congress have "outside" businesses, law practices, investments or positions which yield them substantial returns. So what is so astounding about the fact that Senator Bridges holds such a position and draws a salary for it?

As for the insinuation that Senator Bridges' vote in the Senate has been influenced by his job as trustee for the U. M. W.'s welfare fund, the record will show his position unchanged. He voted for the Taft-Hartley law in 1947 (before his appointment as a trustee) and he did so again this year.

No doubt some would like to smear Senator Bridges. They will have to find a more valid excuse. Might this be a red herring across the 5 percenters' trail? W. B.

Samuel L. Dashiell

I would appreciate sincerely the privilege of your column for a short tribute to Samuel L. Dashiell, who died recently outside Tokyo. He was the son of James L. Dashiell and Coral Dashiell Adams, and was born in Wilmington, Del., in 1890.

Mr. Dashiell served with distinction in the first World War with the Navy, both in this country and in Europe, and in the second World War he was on the staff of the Office of War Information in the United States and in North Africa. At the time of his passing, due to a heart condition, he was a civilian adviser to the Far East Command, based in Tokyo. (He was buried at Arlington National Cemetery on July 26, 1949).

After World War I, he served as a staff or roving correspondent for the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the United Press throughout Europe, and in that period between the two wars he reported virtually all the major international conferences with remarkable skill and an encyclopedic knowledge of world affairs. In the 1940 mass exodus from Paris, as the Nazis advanced, he dodged enemy bombs, making his way south on a bicycle. He escaped and eventually was sent to Algiers, his third assignment to North Africa, whence he was expelled by Vichy officials—an incident, incidentally, which he rightly considered the culminating point of his newspaper career.

In 1943, while the war was still under way, he published "Victory Through Africa" in which he argued with foresight that that continent had to be held as a springboard for our subsequent assaults on Hitler's citadels in Europe and the Far East. Aside from thousands of newspaper dispatches, he was a magazine writer of distinction; he also served as one of the contributing editors of The World Over series of annuals.

Mr. Dashiell had a singular grasp of current affairs and he had a knowledge of arts and letters beyond that attained by most men and women in his profession. The writer particularly remembers the broadness of his learning in biography as well as his skill as a linguist.

May I just add, finally, that in his personal relationships Mr. Dashiell was a man of deep loyalty, great sympathy, understandings, and a raconteur who will not soon be forgotten in many of the world's capitals.

German Army

France is satisfied that her old enemy, Germany cannot fight; German factories have been dismantled. The power, however, which now threatens us all is not Germany, but Russia. The real key to the whole situation, as few competent military authorities would deny, is the position of Germany itself. Berlin is obviously a sore spot, and western Germany, must necessarily be one of two things: a bulwark against Russia, or a wide and open passage for Russian armies advancing across France, Belgium, Holland and Denmark to the North Sea.

A simple and economical defense is at our disposal. We can create a powerful German army immediately. We need not supply Germans with ammunition; we can store it all and guard it ourselves. We can train German pilots and ground crews without allowing them to have planes of their own. We can help German recovery and gain the good will of the German people while strengthening ourselves.

Steel Wages

After claims and counterclaims, disputes and conferences, a threatened strike by workers of the United States Steel Corp. was at least temporarily averted by a 60-day truce. A so-called fact-finding commission was appointed by the President and directed to find if the steel corporation can afford to give its employes a fourth increase in wages. The commission should have been ordered to find if the steel employes are now receiving fair wages.

Are the workers in the great motor industry, as well as those in steel, receiving their fair share from the pool of organized labor's wages? The answer is yes. They are paid the highest wages of any workers in these industries anywhere in the world.

It does not follow that because a corporation is large it is bad. Its very size may make it economically sound and best for everybody. When a great corporation refuses to grant unfair, excessive wage increase to a selfish, autocratic union, it becomes the protector and friend of the unorganized masses of the poor who must pay the increase if allowed. After a corporation has paid fair wages to its employes and reasonable dividends to its owners, it is to the advantage of labor and all the people that its surplus, if there is any after taxes, be used, not to increase wages, but to aid its skilled scientists in their research to improve existing methods and discover new ones that may result in the establishment of new industries, giving more employment, thus contributing to greater prosperity.

Shall organized labor exact one increase in wages after another just because a corporation can afford it, until, at last, there is no surplus left for research and expansion? The corporations won't pay it; it is passed on to the consumers of their products who are already overburdened with the high cost of living.

Wadleigh's Confessions

I would like to correct a misinterpretation of my articles which may linger in the minds of some of your readers as a result of John London's article about me in your July 24 issue.

Of my testimony at the Hiss trial, London wrote "... he expiated publicly for (sic) his grievous sin. The albatross was lifted from his neck." This curious interpretation of my trial testimony had never occurred to me before I read it in London's article. After all, I had testified in a court of justice, and not at one of the religious revival meetings where people are invited to get up and confess their sins in public. My testimony was required of me in order to acquaint the jury with certain facts, and for no other purpose. Contrary to London's little piece of soap opera fiction, I had regained my morale and my perspective before the trial, as stated in my last article. And if I was unburdened of any seagulls, it was because the necessity of concealing my past had given me the painful feeling that I was sailing under false colors. That is something quite different from expiating sin by public confession.

I would like it to be known that I did not write the articles in order to relieve myself of any feelings of guilt. When I was asked to write them I really had no choice, because my need for money was urgent. Except for a small amount that my wife was able to earn for a brief period, we had received no income for over six months. I could probably have earned more by my story if I had sensationalized it, perhaps by playing up the "confessional" aspect with exaggerated and maudlin expressions of remorse, or in some other way; but I preferred to write honestly and soberly.

I was thankful to have the opportunity to correct some prevailing misconceptions of my past actions. Even Marquis Childs, whose wisdom I usually respect, was foolish enough to refer to my spying activities as a plot against the United States. If he reads my articles he will know better.

I hope that these articles may also be of some service to the public, since they give a sober and objective account of something that has been the subject of public passion.

The other inaccuracies in the London article, the various garbled and misplaced quotations, were comparatively innocuous and seem hardly worth comment at this late date. However, I would like to say that both friends and neighbors have been extremely kind and sympathetic. I would not like them to get the impression from London's article that I do not appreciate their friendly behavior. I have, of course, some good friends with whom I have avoided contact recently for obvious reasons.

JULIAN WADLEIGH.
Vienna, Va.

Editor's Note—Galley proofs of Mr. London's article were shown to Mr. Wadleigh in advance of publication. Mr. Wadleigh suggested a number of changes, all of which were made. He then approved the article as revised.

Price Supports And Politics

By Mark Sullivan

Consumer vs. Farmer

THE HOUSE of Representatives was debating a choice between two measures. Both dealt with price support for farm crops, including standards to determine the prices at which crops shall be supported. One was the Aiken Act, now on the statute books to take effect next January 1. The other was the Pace bill, which would repeal the Aiken Act and set up different standards.

The details of the two measures are not material. What is here illustrated is the attitude some members of Congress take toward the question of price support for farm crops. The illustration is in a speech made by Representative Pat Sutton of Tennessee. He put some of his remarks in the form of questions directed to fellow members of the House.

TO MEMBERS from cotton producing States Mr. Sutton said: "How can you . . . go back . . . and tell your people, 'I had a chance to give you $67.50 a ton for your cottonseed, yet I voted against it?'"

To members from tobacco producing States, Mr. Sutton said, "How can you go back to your people and say 'Well, I had a chance to give you 49.6 cents a pound for your tobacco but I did not want you to get that. I wanted you only to get 41.1 cents a pound.'"

Then Mr. Sutton turned to "You farmers from the Mid-West." Specifically, he addressed Representative Murray of Wisconsin. To him Mr. Sutton said: "I want to say how can he go back to his hog producers and tell those farmers out there, 'I had an opportunity to get $19 a hundred for your hogs. I do not want you to have that much money. I just want you to have $16.'"

Wisconsin Representative Murray, replying, took a different note. He confirmed that price support figures in politics. But for himself he asserted that he takes a point of view broader than appeal to farmers as a class:

"I am looking forward to the next campaign when some fellow will get on the radio and say, 'You could have had 67 cents for butterfat, but your Congressman wanted only 59 cents.' I do not like to be accused all the time of being for the farmer. I have an idea that there are some folks in this world besides farmers. I have to represent consumers as well . . ."

Regard for consumers emerged from time to time throughout the long debates which the House has had about price support. Yet much of the debate dealt directly with comparison of price support figures which different proposals would result in. The spirit of much of the debate was one which said in effect that whatever measure would result in the highest prices to farmers was the best measure. Throughout the debate a plain fact was that price support is in politics. And a common assumption was that farmers will vote for whichever party and whatever candidates are for the highest price support.

THE WHOLE QUESTION of price support could be much illuminated by a simple change of words. For "farmers" substitute the word "consumers." Instead of such phrases as "support of prices paid to farmers for their crops" substitute "support of prices paid by consumers for food."

Illumination is an obvious need. It is quite safe to say that price support, with its infinite complexities and vast ramifications, is understood by very few, almost it is impossible to understand. A member of the House, and of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Pace of Georgia, was speaking of a proposed change from the Aiken Act to the plan proposed by Secretary of Agriculture Brannan. He spoke with obvious sincerity of the time and thought the committee had given, and added, "We could study it for 40 years and talk about it and never would have known how it would work."

Senator Martin of Pennsylvania addressed his constituents about the Brannan plan. To emphasize its complexity, he quoted one paragraph of the 86-page long measure.

"The term 'income support standard,' as of any date means the average annual aggregate purchasing power of cash receipts from all farm marketings, including production payments made under Title II of this act, during a period consisting of the first 10 of the preceding 12 calendar years (except that during 1950 such period shall consists of the calendar years 1939 through 1948, inclusive), computed as follows: (1) Divide such cash receipts for each of such 10 years by the parity index for such year; (2) add the amounts obtained under (1) above for each of the 10 years and divide by 10; (3) multiply the amount obtained under (2) above by the most recent parity index."

Music On Streetcars

An elderly friend of mine was sitting with me one late afternoon on a streetcar which did not have a radio. We had ridden but a few blocks when he hastily made for the rear exit. Since I knew that this was not his usual stop I asked him why he was getting off. "Miss that dang-fangled music and news forecasts," he replied, "I'm getting on a streetcar that has a radio."

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Lobbyists' Heyday on the Hill

By Drew Pearson

THE DEMOCRATS seem to have forgotten how they used to berate the lobby-ridden Republican Eightieth Congress and what they promised they would do to lobbyists once they came into power.

In contrast, the Eighty-first Congress is now swarming with more lobbyists than ever, and Senator Kilgore's bill to investigate lobbyists is still stuck in the Rules Committee.

Holding up the lobby investigation are two Senators who publicly claim to be for it. One is Senator Alexander Wiley, Wisconsin Republican, who officially voted for the lobby probe but unofficially did his best to block it. "If this goes through," Wiley once blurted out, "we might have to investigate my son."

He referred to Marshall A. Wiley of Chippewa Falls, Wis., who journeys to Washington to work for the dairy interests. Not considering himself a lobbyist, young Wiley has never bothered to register, but because of his father he gets extra entree.

But the man really blocking the lobby probe is Senator Pat McCarran of Nevada, faithful friend of the lobbyists, who has resorted to the subtle strategy of insisting that his Judiciary Committee do the investigating. This will give him veto power over who should be investigated and what should be done about them.

And since the House has already passed a bill providing for a joint congressional committee to investigate lobbyists, McCarran's obstinacy may mean no lobby investigation at all. Arizona's Senator Carl Hayden of the Rules Committee is trying to talk McCarran into going along with the House version, but that would take the investigation out of McCarran's hands where he could not protect his lobbyist friends.

As a result of this stalemate, the lobbyists are multiplying like flies.

Note: More than 350 new lobbyists have been added to the registration polls since the Democrats came into power. That isn't counting all those who still haven't come out into the open, but who pull strings and influence votes without registering as lobbyists. Of 1600 who have registered, fewer than 150 have dropped out.

Religious Battle Over Education

THE HOUSE LABOR COMMITTEE'S closed-door showdown on the religion-laden Federal aid-to-education bill produced the expected fireworks—and then some.

Committee members shouted, ranted, fumed, glared and even threatened each other as Chairman John Lesinski of Michigan, a Catholic representing Detroit's Polish suburbs, used every move in the congressional book to block the bill.

However, there was one beneficial result. It now is possible to call the roll of the friends and foes of aid to education—as a result of a motion by Boston's young Representative John Kennedy to postpone all school legislation until next January. Kennedy's motion was voted down, but here's how the committee lined up behind closed doors:

Against killing all school-aid legislation during this session (13)—Representatives Sims of South Carolina, Perkins of Kentucky, Bailey of West Virginia, Irving of Missouri, Jacobs of Indiana, Steed of Oklahoma, Barden of North Carolina, Powell of New York, Wier of Minnesota, Wood of Georgia, Howell of New Jersey, all Democrats, and Morton of Kentucky and Kearns of Pennsylvania, Republicans.

For killing all aid to education (12)—Representatives Lesinski, Kennedy, Kelley of Pennsylvania, Lucas of Texas, Democrats, and Burke of Ohio, McConnell of Pennsylvania, Gwinn of New York, Smith of Kansas, Nixon of California, Werdel of California, Brehm of Ohio and Velde of Illinois Republicans.

Lesinski at first tried to filibuster the meeting by refusing to call it to order. Though 22 members of the 25-man committee were present—nine more than a quorum—the Michigander insisted that all 25 members be present. He was thus able to stall 35 minutes before the full membership showed up.

Pennsylvania's McConnell, the ranking committee Republican, raised no objections. In fact, he seemed well satisfied with Lesinski's filibustering and whispered privately to colleagues that he favored postponing action on the school bill because it was "too hot to handle."

Others, however, protested vigorously, including Indiana's Jacobs, a Catholic, who believes in the school-aid program. And when Lesinski tried to resume his filibuster even after the meeting began, Jacobs raised a point of order against him.

Lesinski overruled this, but ran into a fresh attack from South Carolina's Sims, a paratroop hero in the last war.

"Your actions are outrageous," charged Sims. "You've done everything you can to prevent consideration of this legislation to help our schools and our teachers. What's worse, you have denied supporters of the legislation the democratic right to be heard because you are against it."

Declared Perkins of Kentucky: "If you mess up this effort to help our schools, I'll feel like wringing your neck."

There was a smile on Perkins' face when he said this, but no joviality in his voice.

Though Lesinski was slow to start the tempestuous meeting, he was quick to end it when colleagues pressed him to set another meeting to reconsider the education bill.

Ignoring these demands, he shouted: "It's 12 o'clock. The House is in session and it is therefore against the rules for us to continue this meeting."

Actually, the clock on the wall read 11:47, so Lesinski had 13 minutes—plenty of time to entertain a motion before the House convened. But he sat stubbornly silent though Representatives Sims, Steed, Wier, Perkins and Bailey were all on their feet requesting that a date be set for a subsequent meeting.

Keeping the Record Straight

THIS COLUMN was in error in recently reporting that Herbert Lehman, long-time Governor of New York, hoped to be the first Jew "elected" to the Senate. Further research discloses that the first Jew to sit in the Senate was Judah P. Benjamin of Louisiana, elected in 1848 and serving until 1861, when, with the outbreak of the Civil War, he withdrew to become Secretary of War in the Confederate cabinet. After the war he fled to England, where he died.

Another Jewish Senator, David Levy Yulee, was elected from Florida in 1853 and also served until the outbreak of the Civil War. Both Yulee and Benjamin, incidentally, were born in the Virgin Islands. Other Jewish Senators include Joseph Simon, Oregon Republican, who took his seat in 1898; Simon Guggenheim, Colorado Republican, 1907, and Isidor Raynor of Maryland, 1905.

Matter of Fact

India Really Thirsts for Dollars

By Stewart Alsop

NEW DELHI—Near an Indian village on the outskirts of New Delhi, a little crowd is gathered round an awkward-looking piece of machinery which comes from faraway California. It is a well-driller, capable of biting down hundreds of feet through earth and solid rock in a few hours. The peasants from the nearby village look at it with curiosity mixed with awe.

It is mercilessly hot. This is before the monsoons have begun to take effect, and as far as the eye can see the earth has a cracked, dusty dryness. The sweating Indian crew does something complicated to the driller. It bites deeper into the earth—down to more than 300 feet. Then suddenly out of a big nozzle comes a thick, dirty, steady stream of water. It runs down over shallow ditches, out and over the parched land.

This scene may have been staged—such scenes have been staged before by governments anxious to impress foreigners. But unless this reporter is very easily duped, there was nothing staged about the reactions of the village peasants when the water poured out over the fields. They made odd little praying gestures with their hands pressed together before their faces, ducking their heads and grinning. They were so obviously happy that they made the onlooker smile in sympathy.

This well would triple or quadruple the yield from their fields, would give them two or three crops a year instead of one. If the monsoons failed, the well would make, quite literally, the difference between life and death.

A Restricted Miracle

NO AMERICAN witnessing this scene could help feeling a twinge of pride in the miraculous drill which only the United States can make. And no American could help feeling something more than regret that the drills will not be allowed to do their miraculous work on anything like the scale which India's hunger demands.

The scene could be repeated many times, for throughout vast areas of this huge, sun-baked land there is known to be water not far below the surface. But the scene is not being repeated. These special drills cost a great many dollars. There are less than a dozen such drills in the whole country. There are not likely soon to be more, simply because India does not sell enough to the United States to earn the dollars to pay for the drills.

This is the "dollar problem" in a nutshell, as it affects not only India but the whole non-Soviet world.

Meanwhile, India continues to suffer from precisely the same evil that has been the Communists' greatest single asset in China—there are too many people, and too little food. India's food problem is not essentially insoluble. It is a matter of a 10 per cent deficit in the productivity of the Indian land. This deficit must be measured not in terms of percentages, but in terms of half-starved Indians and the kind of bitter political unrest which plays directly into Communist hands.

The Indian government is now preparing to make a strenuous effort to overcome this deficit. The United States can, no doubt, do something to help increase India's productivity under President Truman's "bold, new program." But the kind of really bold and really new program required sharply to raise the Indian standard of living in a short time would run into many hundreds of million of dollars, and it is hardly likely that the American Congress, in its present mood, would consider such a proposal.

An Outlet for Wheat

YET ANOTHER, and more modest, proposal has now been made by the Indian government to the American Government through the American Embassy here. This proposal, which is a great deal more interesting than it appears on the surface, is simply that some of America's surplus wheat be turned over to India free or at a nominal price. This wheat would then be used to cover part of India's food deficit in the years to come while India struggles toward self-sufficiency.

It is entirely predictable that wheat, and other agricultural surpluses will soon begin to pile up in the American granaries. The American farm price support program, which was undertaken wholly for American domestic and economic reasons, and which is approved in principle by both major parties, makes this certain. This program, as British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin has pointed out, vastly complicates the world-wide dollar problem. If wheat and other American products were allowed to fall to their natural price levels, fewer foreign dollars would buy more food.

The Indian proposal poses a simple but vital question: What is to be done with this wheat, for which the American taxpayer will already in effect have paid? It could be left to rot in American bins. Or it could be used to promote American interests abroad. Surely American interests are better served if American surplus wheat is eaten by undernourished Indians than if it is eaten by rats in warehouses.

At any rate, one thing is clear. If the economic dilemma which now threatens the whole non-Soviet world is to be dealt with, it must be attacked with energy and imagination. The Indian proposal, which the State Department is now mulling over, suggests at least one avenue of attack.

Senator Neely

Our Fiery New Mayor

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

WASHINGTON can look to new excitements when Senator Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.) becomes its "mayor."

Neely, 74, has been a political fireball in his State through a long generation. Now he is slated to become chairman of the Senate District Committee to succeed Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), nominee for Attorney General.

Neely has been in Congress, both its houses, some 26 of the past 36 years. Four of the missing 10 years he spent as Governor of his State, and the other 6 were passed in "retirement."

The 26 years were stormy. There were continuing battles with Republicans. There were bitter intraparty battles. In them, a mighty weapon was his torrential flow of bitter eloquence.

Sales Tax Foe

THIS eloquence has flared already in District affairs. He fought the District sales tax bill, calling it an "abomination." He would rather be "caught stealing sheep" than voting for it.

He fought the renomination of District Commissioner John Russell Young.

On both points he was at odds with Chairman McGrath and the committee majority. But odds don't bother Neely.

When he was Governor, Neely got along with his first Legislature in 1941-42, but in 1943 the fireworks started. He vetoed bill after bill, and they were passed over his veto.

In one message he said he was vetoing a bill to repeal the State income tax law "with the fervor with which I would feed a starving Lazarus at a merciless rich man's gate."

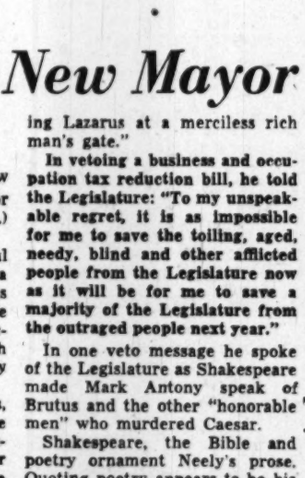
In vetoing a business and occupation tax reduction bill, he told the Legislature: "To my unspeakable regret, it is as impossible for me to save the toiling, aged, needy, blind and other afflicted people from the Legislature now as it will be for me to save a majority of the Legislature from the outraged people next year."

In one veto message he spoke of the Legislature as Shakespeare made Mark Antony speak of Brutus and the other "honorable men" who murdered Caesar.

Shakespeare, the Bible and poetry ornament Neely's prose. Quoting poetry appears to be his favorite way to start and stop a speech. He traces his lineage to a cousin of the Scottish poet, Robert Burns.

Old Infantryman

NEELY was born near Gove, W. Va. He grew up on his parents' farm. He attended rural schools and then taught school for four years. He turned to law and received his degree from West Virginia University in 1901, after taking time out to serve in the infantry in the Spanish War.



SENATOR M. M. NEELY
. . . 26 turbulent years

He won several intercollegiate oratorical contests. His first political office was a two-year term as Mayor of Fairmont, to which he was elected on a dry platform. He then served three years as clerk of the West Virginia House of Delegates.

He first won a seat in the House in 1913, and served until 1921. He was defeated for re-election, but after two years in private life he won his first term in the Senate. The Hoover sweep of 1928 again put him out of office, but he was back in the Senate with the 1930 election.

A chapter of sharp controversy was written during his Senate career in the '30s, when he broke with Rush Holt, the "boy Senator" whom Neely had supported. The fighting centered around patronage, but their politics also diverged sharply. Neely followed the New Deal; Holt backed it in winning his seat, then fought the Roosevelt Administration on many major issues.

The Neely-Holt feud was renewed in the 1948 West Virginia Democratic senatorial primary, with Neely coming out on top.

Dispossessed Foes

BETWEEN his last and his present term in the Senate, Neely took two unorthodox political steps. Many Governors move up to the Senate; few step the other way. Neely did, leaving the Senate to win the governorship because the Democratic faction then in control of the State House would not support a candidate "liberal" enough for his taste.

After two years as Governor, he won the Democratic nomination for Senator, losing to Republican Chapman Revercomb. Then came the second unorthodox move—winning election to the House. He lost his seat in 1946, and many said then he was politically dead, but he came back last year to win over Holt in the primary, and over Revercomb in the general election.

Neely at this point will not discuss plans for the District beyond saying he wants to discuss Washington's problems with local groups and "make a useful plan."

Once the plan is made, you can sit back and listen for the poetry and watch the sparks fly.

The Gallup Poll

7 in 10 Voters Veto Atom Curb

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

A SUGGESTION made recently by Senator Ralph E. Flanders of Vermont to limit American use of the atom bomb finds comparatively little support from voters interviewed in a Nation-wide survey.

The Senator's proposal was that the United States pledge itself never to use the atom bomb in warfare until some other nation has used it on us first.

Seven out of every ten persons questioned in the survey said they disagree with the proposal.

The results:

"A U. S. Senator has suggested that the United States should pledge that we will never use the atom bomb in warfare until some other nation has used it on us first. What is your opinion of this suggestion?"

Good idea, agree with it	20%
Disagree	70
Outlaw the bomb	5
No opinion	5

The American people are not by nature bloodthirsty or warlike. We entered both World Wars long after they had been started by other countries. What probably prompts the vote against the Flanders proposal is the belief that Russia would be the country most likely to use the bomb against us. In their present anti-Russian mood, Americans are anxious to avoid anything that might play into Russia's hands.

Voters who have had the largest amount of school education are the least in favor of the Flanders proposal, as the following table shows:

	College	High Sch'l	Grade Sch'l
Agree	18%	19%	22%
Disagree	74	72	65
Outlaw bomb	5	4	5
No opinion	3	5	8

The issue of civilian versus military control was put before voters in a survey by the institute. All those voters who had followed the Lilienthal investigation were asked this question:

"Do you think the development and use of atomic energy in the United States should be mainly under the control of directors who are Army officers—or under the control of directors who are civilians?"

Here is the vote:

Army control	38%
Civilian control	36
No difference	12
No opinion	14

Plans Trial Balloon Speeches

Byrnes Eyeing Governor's Chair

By Robert S. Allen

JAMES F. BYRNES may return to the political arena. The one-time Senator, Supreme Court Justice and Secretary of State is considering running for Governor of South Carolina next year.

Byrnes has been quietly sounding out State leaders on this possibility. He is spending considerable time in South Carolina. His recent speech attacking the "welfare state" theory was in the nature of a trial balloon. He will make several other speeches. One of them may deal with the civil rights issue.

Byrnes did not openly join the Dixiecrat movement, but he did no campaigning for the Truman-Barkley ticket.

Gov. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat presidential standard-bearer, will not run for reelection. He will oppose Senator Olin Johnston, whose term expires next year

The Uranium Relay

THE congressional probe of the Atomic Energy Commission has uncovered the full story of Britain's tight monopoly of the rich uranium deposits in the Belgian Congo. These are the facts as ascertained by the investigators:

The British do not own the deposits. They are controlled by a small group of private individuals, who sell to the British. The British have an arrangement giving them a monopoly of the entire output of these deposits. They pay for the ore, 50 per cent in dollars and 50 per cent in pounds. In reselling to the United States, the British require 100 per cent payment in dollars.

The names of the owners of the Conga deposits are known to the AEC. The British are insisting that this information not be made public.

UEW Leftists Trail

CIO chiefs are closely watching the trend of the election of delegates to the convention of the big leftist-controlled United Electrical Workers. So far, the outlook is very promising for an anti-Communist shakeup. The convention takes place in Cleveland September 19-24.

Fifty-three local unions have elected delegates pledged to Frederick Kelly for UEW president. He is business manager of the Lynn, Mass., local, and a strong anti-Communist. The vote in these locals was 1158 to 331 against a leftist slate. Last year the same locals voted 862 to 579 for the leftists.

Only a third of the delegates have been chosen, but CIO chiefs are heartened by the trend to date. They think there is a good chance to oust leftist control of the big union. The anti-Commie drive is being directed by James Carey, one-time UEW president, who is now CIO secretary-treasurer. Carey played a leading role in organizing the UEW and then was axed by the Communists when he opposed them.

Looking at the South

Liberalism Emerges

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, MISS.—For the past two weeks or more I have been receiving scores of letters which express a once unusual kind of Southern protest.

These letters were prompted by an article on the Southern liberal spirit which I wrote recently for a national weekly magazine. The article cited a considerable number of outstanding Southern educators, editors, clergymen, businessmen, labor and political leaders and others who might differ among themselves but who could be identified as speaking for a progressive South. In it I pointed out that I was omitting many Southerners from the list, partly because of space and partly because of my own ignorance of their activities.

Ever since the article appeared, that list has been added to by mostly friendly critics who name from 1 to 20 other Southern progressives whom I omitted and who protest their being overlooked. The total omissions, as compiled from these letters alone, far surpass the total number who were listed; and in many cases it seems incredible that I could have overlooked them.

The point, however, is not that I overlooked so many workers for the South but that there are so many who speak up for them and demand their recognition. It was not too long ago that such an article as I wrote would have brought in a myriad of letters damning Southerners who deviated from the norm. Moreover, a great many Southerners of liberal spirit would have shunned inclusion in such a compilation, on the grounds that the issues involved were very delicate and that publicity was not helpful.

Today they are no longer on the defensive. From one Southern community I received at least 50 letters regretting that I had not seen fit to describe the successful work done by its newspaper, its city government, its church leaders and citizens at large in the fields of human relationships and political progress. One of the communicants was the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, an organization which in general is more concerned with additional payrolls.

This is an important change. It helps explain a perceptibly different attitude elsewhere in the Nation, particularly exemplified by the apparent decision of a number of national periodicals to understand the South.

There are thousands of Southerners who are willing today to stand up and be counted. It is good to know that there are also responsible non-Southerners who are willing now to count them. Jointly, they provide a needed balance.

Bomb Experts Still Digging Out 'Sleepers'

By Arthur W. White

Associated Press Staff Writer

LONDON—For eight years Mrs. Hannah Hall and family of Stepney ate breakfast sitting over a 2000-pound unexploded bomb.

They never suspected it, until one exciting day when the back yard started to sink. An army bomb squad was called. Thirty feet down they found one of Hitler's "sleepers." It had been there since 1941.

Britain still has hundreds more like it. They are scattered all over the country. New ones are reported every day.

Twelve hundred men—German former prisoners and British soldiers of the Royal Engineers—are digging them up. Seven British-laid anti-invasion coastal minefields still have to be cleared, too.

Some of the "sleepers" are impact bombs which for some reason didn't explode when they hit. Others are deadly time bombs gone haywire. It doesn't take much to start them ticking again.

A little water seeping into a deteriorating fuse, a bus rumbling along a nearby street could mean sudden death to scores.

Bomb disposal chiefs dislike discussing the possibility of such a tragedy, but they say it could happen. A "sleeper" dropped in 1940 could awake with a roar in 1950 or even years afterward.

Whether such a disaster occurs, they say, depends largely on luck. So far the luck of British civilians has been miraculous.

Three Civilian Fatalities

SINCE 1945, countless mines and unexploded bombs have been unearthed. In that period they killed only three civilians, but 30 Royal Engineers and three Gemans died.

The 700 Germans now engaged in the task are volunteers who turned down repatriation. They get five pounds ($20) a week. Some are married to British girls.

Royal Engineers do the dangerous fuse work on the bombs. The Germans do the digging. The Engineers don't get even six-pence extra for the job.

"It's an honor," says quiet-voiced Angus Buchanan, Britain's deputy bomb disposal chief. "We don't want rewards."

Buchanan, a 30-year-old major, has lived close to instant death for seven years. More than 1000 bombs have lost their sting under his nimble fingers. Scoffing at the danger, he prefers to have people believe the only hazard is catching cold in the damp shafts.

But the records show that altogether from 1939 to the present, 246 of his comrades died at their work and 147 were injured, most of them during the desperate blitz days of 1940-41.

More than 45,000 bombs have been dug up.

The bomb business has its funny side, too. Buchanan tells of one exasperated resident who tried in vain to keep his bomb rather than have the squad dig up his garden.

"We broke our backs getting that thing out," laughed Buchanan, "but all the chap said was, 'Oh, my poor tulips.'"

BERLIN.—Would you risk your life every day for four bucks? Werner Stephan does. He has done it for nine years, and he expects to do it for 50 more years—if he is lucky.

Stephan is boss demolition man in Berlin. He goes around yanking the fuses out of bombs that didn't go off. Never mind how banged around Berlin looks. A lot of the eggs that fell here didn't explode. They just burrowed in and lay there waiting for somebody to tickle them.

Nobody knows how many so-called duds lie in the ruins of Berlin—nor when one will go up, carrying the nearest person with it.

Rubble workers find them every day. If they see the bomb before it goes off, they call the police, and that's when Stephan gets an emergency call.

The police halt all traffic. Calamity-weary Berliners still grow tense when they approach one of these dramatic situations. They stand at a respectful distance and wait.

Finally, Stephan or one of his helpers walks out of the wreck of a building and says the bomb has been "killed." Traffic starts up. Things are normal again. Stephan goes home to wait for another spine-chiller.

The next call may be to pull the fangs of a giant blockbuster, or it may be a Russian hand grenade. None of them is a toy.

STEPHAN and two other experts comprise the German task force to take the sting out of old bombs. They never get a chance to sit around and talk about the mistakes they made on the job.

Stephan, now 31, is fatalistic about his job. He has seen three experts and 13 laborers killed while digging out duds. Excitement has become the normal for him.

"Nearly every day our squad has to rush out to remove the fuse from a bomb," he says. They "killed" 12,000 in the first year after the war. Now they average five or six a week.

"Our work isn't so hard physically," says Stephan, but he adds with a smile, "It attacks the nerves a little."

The reward is worth it to him and his men. Their normal pay is 250 marks ($75) a month as city workers, but as demolitioners they get an extra 150 marks and the highest food ration card. This is a good salary in Germany, where one can buy all his rationed food for 20 marks a month and pay 50 to 80 marks rent, but it still is only four bucks a day.

Stephan needs his extra marks for the high premium on his life insurance. The city decided he could not be included in its accident pension fund. Stephan got married last winter. His wife knows he is in some kind of risky business but he doesn't tell her much.

"If anything goes wrong, we can't help it," Stephan says, "so there's no use talking about it."

Rooting out all the bombs is a 50-year job in Stephan's opinion. The explosive in a dud remains "alive" that long.

U. S. Hybrid Corn a New Boon to Italy

By Frank Gervasi

Post Reporter

LATINA, Italy.—Americans who fought here on their way to Rome from Anzio's nearby beaches remember this shell-chewed town as Littoria and a tough one to take from the retreating Germans.

Its name has been changed in the general rush to forget Mussolini and his works. For he built Littoria as a shiny, exaggeratedly modernistic capital of the Pontine Marshes.

But bigger changes than a switch in names are happening here. In the coarse red soil of the fields along the Appian Way, a revolution is gestating.

Il Duce rescued the 75,000 acres of the Agro Pontinio from malaria and the flooding rivers. But he never saved them from poverty. That job was left for a couple of imaginative Americans, with the help of a few sacks of hybrid corn seed and the sweat of Italian farmers.

It may take 10 years, but Ralph Germann, a rugged, 39-year-old redhead from Fairview, Kans., and his boss, hustling Harry McClelland of San Francisco, are confident that the job will be done.

McClelland, former vice president of the Bank of America, is head of the agricultural section of the ECA mission in Rome. Germann runs the hybrid corn show.

Both believe that just as much European reconstruction can be done with only "a little money, a few tools and seeds and a lot of know-how and hard work" as with billions of dollars. And in their opinion the hybrid corn program is "by far the most spectacular thing we have done since Marshall aid began." It will particularly benefit Italy.

Midwest Made Over

HYBRID corn, introduced in America 15 or 20 years ago, revolutionized farming and cattle raising in our Midwest. It increased corn production by about 25 per cent, cheapened the cost of animal feeding and boosted the cattle industry.

It can do the same for Europe, particularly for Italy where corn is needed not only for cattle and poultry but for human beings as well. Polenta, a mush made of corn meal, sustains most of the agricultural half of Italy's population through the winters.

Until McClelland and Germann came along with their leaflets, pep talks and sacks of US-13, U-50, Iowa 306, Funk G-114 and a dozen other varieties, the farmers of the Agro Pontinio were considering giving up corn as a regular crop in favor of more profitable tobacco and cotton. Had they done so, Italy would have had to import more maize from America and Canada, using Marshall dollars which might have been better spent for machinery and raw materials.

But hybrid tests run in the Agro Pontinio have proved to its peasants that they can increase their yields by from 25 to 40 per cent. Some experiments in Lombardy have indicated that it is possible to raise corn output in those more fertile areas by as much as 127.2 per cent.

An overall national increase of at least 30 per cent could be achieved in Italy, American experts believe, without multi-million-dollar investments for fancy machinery. It would not even be necessary to alter substantially the present pattern of Italian agriculture which, although backward by our mechanized standards, is highly rated by our experts.

"We say out in California," as McClelland put it, "that the best fertilizer is a farmer's foosteps—meaning that hard work and care produce the biggest and best crops. Well, Italian farms certainly get that kind of fertilizer."

McCLELLAND explained the arithmetic of the potential corn revolution.

"Italy," he said, "annually puts about 1,500,000 acres into corn. If by 1952 we can induce Italian farmers to plant a fifth of that area in hybrid corn, Italy could add 750,000 tons to its maize output.

"With corn at $120 a ton, that would add about 90 million dollars to the value of the Italian crop. Italy, which was obliged to import 100,000 tons of corn last year, would not only become self-sufficient in that grain, but would become an exporter.

"Even this year, with only 130,000 acres in hybrid corn, Italy will grow 45,000 tons more corn than it usually does, nearly half what it imported last year. It will save about $5,500,000—that much less to be drawn from Marshall funds."

McClelland became eloquent as to what Italy could achieve in 10 years. With 90 per cent of the country's corn acreage sown with hybrids, he estimated, Italian production could reach 4,500,000 tons—1,500,000 tons more than it is now. The country could become, he said, a hybrid corn producing center for all Europe.

With hybrids selling at $230 a ton, McClelland pointed out, the seed could become one of the country's most valuable exports, perhaps replacing in importance even silk, now meeting head-on competition from the Japanese output.

In the experimental plots at Maccarese, Torre in Pietra and here in Latinia, there was evidence that McClelland's and Germann's hopes for Italian corn production might be realized. The maize stood tall in the fields just off the Appian Way—the stalks thick and juicy, the leaves green and broad clear down to the dry soil. There were two and often three good ears to every plant, bespeaking abundant ensilage for cattle and plenty of meal for polenta.

Peasants Are Proud

GERMANN, who periodically checks on the 40 experimental plots in areas where the best varieties have not yet been determined—from the Po Valley down through the Abbruzzi, the Puglie, Calabria and Sardinia and Sicily—smiled appreciatively as he pushed his way through the foliage.

Here was a dream as old as Military Government days back in 1944 coming true. Germann had brought packets of hybrid corn with him when he landed with the Fifth Army.

Italian officials and Pontinian peasants followed Ralph up one row and down another, as proud and pleased as he. Among them was Giuseppe Valente, farmer. Never in his 58 years, Giuseppe vowed, had he seen such corn. He had sown and hoed most of the experimental plot himself.

Giuseppe knew every variety in it—here was Indiana 417-B, and there Iowa 4417. He curbed thumb and forefinger around the stalks. They would stand up well to the harvest-time winds that would bend the roadside poplars and scream through the arches of the Roman aqueducts that rib the campagna.

Ohio K-35 seemed to be doing best, Giuseppe said. He called it, affectionately, "Oh-hee-oh kah-pah trenta cinque." But Minhybrid was coming alone fine and so were the Wisconsins, 641-A and 692.

Giuseppe pointed to adjoining rows of native corn and shook his head sadly.

"I used to think our own granturco was good," he said. 'But I see so many differences now. Ours is tall, yes. But the ears are high, beyond reach, making much work at the harvest.

"And then our corn dries up, sometimes even before the ear is ripe. For forage we must cut it green, with the ears still in the milky stage, which means acid free in the silos and sometimes sick cows in the winter.

"But the leaves of this ibrido and the stalks stay green until the ears are mature. So, we can pick the ears for farina for the polenta and then cut the stalks for forage. E, poi, rende . . . then, too, it produces."

Agriculture Is Sick

YES, Giuseppe was "sold" on hybrid corn, as were some 8000 other Italian farmers this year. But tens of thousands more must be convinced of its virtues before the promised revolution is realized. Similarly, there is much to be done in the whole field of Italian agriculture before the industry can even begin to provide the work and food required by the country's ever-increasing population.

The Italian economy is more dependent on agriculture than the economies of most western countries. Nearly half of Italy's people derive their livelihood from the land, as against only a fifth or a quarter in the United States.

But the whole Italian economy is sick, and no segment of it is sicker than the agricultural. Vast areas totaling four million acres are sadly in need of fertilizers, drainage, roads and other improvements. At least 1,500,000 acres could be brought into production through irrigation.

Some of the work will cost millions of dollars—billions of lire. Nearly 60 billion lire from ECA counterpart funds—money deposited by the Italian government in the Bank of Italy equivalent to direct American aid—have been earmarked for agricultural improvements. The sum comes to nearly 100 million dollars.

But much can be done for little investment and even none at all. Italian farm production can be increased immeasurably merely by teaching a peasant how to use a hand plow instead of a hoe, a scythe instead of a sickle.

The Italian government, under constant urging from McClelland and his boss, West Coast industrialist J. D. Zellerbach, has seen the wisdom of teaching the contadini, the farmers, new techniques. It has appropriated the equivalent of $330,000 for the "education of farmers and demonstration activities" through its counterpart of our Agriculture Department Extension Service.

For "experimenting with hybrid corn seed imported from the USA," the government has set aside $500,000. Yet through the hybrid program alone, the state may accomplish more in 10 years than with the hundreds of millions of dollars which will be poured into more ambitious projects.

Problem in Education

SUCCESS or failure of the hybrid corn program will depend largely on whether or not the peasants can be educated to accept the new fangled stuff. Germann believes they can. He influenced many American farmers in favor of hybrid corn when he was a county agent back in Russell County, Kansas.

"Sure there is resistance on the part of some farmers," he said. "Farmers anywhere are less open to new ideas than other people. It took us 20 years to put hybrid over in the States. I think it can be done here in 10 years. It is a matter of life and death in this country, not merely one of profit and loss."

A lot has been accomplished already, and with a relatively small investment, monetarily speaking. Germann estimated that the seed for the first tests in 1944 and three subsequent years cost less than $300.

In 1948, 50 tons of hybrid corn were brought in. This year, Italy imported 2000 tons for about $400,000. The anticipated additional yield of 45,000 tons will bring farmers $5,500,000, more or less. Not a bad return on the investment.

The results of the hybrid corn experiments have fired the imaginations of Italian agronomists. One, Dr. Vincenzo Trischetta, is busy on a project to increase the country's tomato output by from 300 to 400 per cent—simply by lifting the vines from the ground, where Italian peasants like to leave them, and training the plants on poles.

Such schemes, the substitution of tractors for costlier trios of oxen, of scythes for sickles, hand plows for hoes and the use of more and better fertilizers and pesticides, might lift Italy out of its agricultural mire.

Without large scale emigration and other aids, Italy can probably never solve its overpopulation problem. But, in the opinion of Yankee agriculturists like McClelland—who ran 1,500,000 acres of California farmlands for the Bank of America—there is no reason why the country cannot intensify its farming. Even with limited resources, the country could provide more food, more work and a better standard of living for its people. The key is what we grew tired of calling "know-how" back in war days. That is what we have more of than we have dollars, and what we must supply Italy, all Europe, for a long time to come.

The Magazine Rack

By Philip A. Orme

LIFE is serious at times. In its current issue, the elaborately photographic magazine confesses editorially that while it isn't too much worried by present wage demands in steel and other manufacturing industries, it very much is by something it descries behind them—the intimation of "complete statism in America."

By way of substantiation, readers are referred to last month's report on a national economic policy for 1949 by Robert R. Nathan Associates. Therein occurs the statement, "Steps should be taken when business is good to assure solid and sound relationships in the economy . . . To the extent that private initiative will not or cannot undertake such responsibilities, the Government must use its authority to accomplish what is needed."

"There you have it," remarks Life. "If United States enterprise cannot always pay ever-rising wages, grant ever-increasing benefits and sustain ever-expanding 'full' employment, Government must step in and see that it's done willy-nilly. . . . There is the philosophy behind the recent statements and acts of such a good labor democrat as Philip Murray. And there, whether or not Mr. Truman knows it, is the philosophy behind the President's indiscriminate benevolence toward labor. . . . There is the wide, the beguiling road to complete statism in America."

MAYBE Little Red Riding Hood and her granny just dreamed it all. Addressing himself to the vital question, "Do Wolves Bite People?," in American Legion Magazine, John Durant comes to the conclusion they don't—at least the North American sort, unmolested, nonrabid, and, of course, quadrupedal.

"During the past quarter of a century," writes Durant, "I have done considerable traveling in the Quebec wilds . . . I have seen scores of wolves, singly and in small packs . . . and I have never known a wolf to make a menacing gesture or even come close enough to be reached by a thrown stone."

But when in his tent at night he hears the wolf song, "that long, deep, throaty wail, the most melancholy sound in nature," Durant closes the flaps and looks to his rifle.

SEVERE as is Germany's postwar material and spiritual hangover, she has not lost her technical cunning, it is made manifest by Jonathan Tichenor's article, "We Test the Casca," in U. S. Camera. Tichenor is reporting on a new precision machine, the name of which is derived by initialism from C. A. Steinheil Camera, Steinheil being a name to conjure with in this field.

"The Casca, it is thought, will make the greatest bid to recapture Germany's former preeminence in the photographic industry," the author says. It's outstanding because of "fine engineering accomplishments: ease of operation."

"We found without reservation that this camera is simpler and more efficient to use than any other miniature we know."

DESPITE our country's brilliant and unremitting research campaign against its No. 2 killer, early and intelligent diagnosis still holds more promise than laboratory findings, maintains Selwyn James in Redbook's "What We can do About Cancer."

The writer stresses that the malignant neoplasm "in its early stages is among the most curable of all insidious diseases." "Last year . . . 65,000 patients who were rushed to hospitals emerged a short time later happily walking on their own two feet. . . . But this year nearly 70,000 will succumb needlessly to cancer . . . The reason is both shocking and remediable: these unfortunates will fall prey to cancer's trusted allies—delay and inaccurate diagnosis."

A layman's checklist of danger signals, drawn by three specialists, forms a valuable section of the piece.

DESCANTING on the allegedly rigged numbers policy racket now furnishing grist for New York's legal mill and the press, John Lardner is reminded of a professional gambler, Titanic Thompson, some of whose exploits are recounted in Joe Madden's latest volume of memoirs, "Who the Hell Cares?"

In the "Fine Art of Being Previous" (Newsweek), Lardner notes that though Titanic "never worked with rings or inside men, he is fond of knowing the score beforehand." Two examples: Titanic offered to bet an automobile companion he could reach Kansas City in 15 minutes from a point considerably outside that metropolis. The bait was taken with avidity, since the quarry had just seen a stone labeled, "Kansas City—20 Miles." How was he to know Mr. Thompson previously had moved the marker 10 miles closer to town? . . . Titanic wagered a street vendor he could throw a peanut across Broadway. He won easily, having palmed the goober and loaded it with lead pellets.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

DR. LOUIS B. WRIGHT, Folger Shakespeare Library director, is editing William Strachey's "Historie of Travaile into Virginia Britannia" for the Hakluyt Society of London, which since 1846 has been printing rare travel accounts for its subscribers.

Strachey, who visited James Town in 1610, wrote one of the earliest descriptions of the New World by an English observer, but since it was not printed until 1849 Wright's work is something of a centenary task.

Speaking of Virginia, Mrs. Dorothy M. Holcombe of 1111 S. Washington st., Alexandria, has produced a 53-page history of "Alexandria, Port on the Potomac." It is attractively illustrated with reproductions of eight etchings by Mrs. Bertha H. Dougherty, who divides her time between Alexandria and Old Lyme, Conn. The pamphlet is handy for both reference and gift.

Both published by the Shenandoah Publishing House, Strasburg, Va., one is a study of "Sanskrit, Its Origin, Composition and Diffusion;" the other, "Herr Volcnant Von Erlach, Minnesinger," is a solution of the problem of the identity of a companion of Walther von der Vogelweide, the famous early thirteenth century minnesinger.

NICHOLAS POLUNIN, McGill University professor of botany and fellow of New College, Oxford, was in town recently, and eager to get started to the Far North again—understandably so in view of the weather.

His "Arctic Unfolding," an account of his experiences on the Canadian Airborne Expedition in Northern Ungava, the Northwest Territories and the Arctic Archipelago, was published a few weeks ago in London. The expedition's discovery of large islands and other features suggests that we don't know our own backyard as well as we should.

Shavian Markup

ROBERT MUSEL, United Press correspondent, in a dispatch from Ayot St. Lawrence on the occasion of George Bernard Shaw's ninety-third birthday, tells how Shaw, when he gave up his London flat, "decided to sell all the books and papers he did not want to take to his country house.

"The books' value was estimated at about $4000, with some first editions among them.

"That didn't satisfy Shaw. So to a limited edition of Hamlet worth about $60 he added an 800-word essay on the blank leaves at the front. Up went the price by $400. His first edition of Lawrence's "Seven Pillars of Wisdom' had another notation in Shaw's hand of his help to Lawrence in writing the book. That added another $400 to the price.

"So with a marginal note here, a signature on the flyleaf there, Shaw astounded even the auctioneers. But not Shaw.

"If Shakespeare had left similar notes," he chuckled, "think what the price would have been."

To say nothing of his reputation as a cute old man.

A Gift Horse Gets Whipped

EUROPEAN BELIEFS REGARDING THE UNITED STATES, a Survey Under the Direction of Henry Lee Munson. Common Council for American Unity. $2.

IN 135 paper-backed, graphically illustrated pages, the results of a recent survey of opinions in Marshall Plan countries toward our country are compiled.

Forty-five questions, encompassing the East-West controversy, our home Government and its pressure groups, our foreign policy, the Marshall Plan, Americans as individuals, and more, form the basis of the report.

Some surprising revelations of the surveyors are that one fifth of the population believes the United States is plotting war against Russia; another fourth believe us equally at fault. Fifty per cent consider us too materialistic; one fourth think we're trying to force American capitalism on Europe. One out of three believes the Marshall Plan to be solely a political weapon against Russia, possibly to be dropped if the Russian problem is resolved.

In the first half of the book, each country is rated on each question. Excerpts from comments are included to show shades of opinion and reasoning. In the second half, each question is graphed, showing the answer according to each country, and the total.—GEORGANNE WILLIAMSON.

Narrative, Not Analysis

2-Dimensional Study Of Bitter Strindberg

THE STRANGE LIFE OF AUGUST STRINDBERG. By Elizabeth Sprigge. Macmillan. 246 p.p. $3.50.

THE DARK and bitter Swede, August Strindberg (1849-1912), lived a life of paradox:

Notorious for his vicious anti-feminism, he loved women, was thrice married, and went to his grave complaining bitterly because he could not marry a fourth wife.

Hailed as a "super-realist" and partially trained as a scientist, he nevertheless dabbled in the occult and thought he had found the secret of making gold.

Passionate exponent of the intimate, 200-seat theater, he wrote plays with such elaborate and unlikely stage sets that it would have taken hundreds of thousands of dollars plus Walt Disney plus Max Reinhart to give them more than a hint of the adequate staging.

ELIZABETH SPRIGGE

. . . Good female novelist's job

A moralist upon whose shoulders the mantle of Swedenborg sometimes briefly rested, he was constantly shocking the world and was prosecuted in Stockholm for "writings injurious to morality and offensive to religion."

Sensitive to the suffering of human kind, he himself inflicted suffering on everyone he loved as well as everyone he hated.

Scorning vengeance as a motive, he lived for years inspired by revenge.

Rich Chronology

FEW writers have been so incredibly complex as this Swedish playwright, novelist, philosopher and essayist who almost from birth was wracked with jealousy, morbidly eager to attract attention, twisted by a mother fixation, bitter about his "poverty," violent in his reaction to all human beings and all systems of thought.

Elizabeth Sprigge, perhaps realizing her limitations, has not attempted a thorough critical or psychoanalytical study of Strindberg. She has been content to tell his life story as a chronological narrative, enriched, however, by a thorough knowledge of his autobiographical plays and novels and his many letters, some of them only recently available.

Thus we are given a good running account of Strindberg's neurotic childhood, his brief and fairly inglorious attempts to gain a formal education at Upsala, his first experiences as an actor, playwright and journalist, and his career as an assistant librarian at the Royal Library in Stockholm.

Elizabeth Sprigge does a good female novelist's job of telling the romances in Strindberg's life: the curious menage a trois with Siri von Essen and her husband Baron Wrangle, which led eventually to marriage with Siri; his later marriages to Frida Uhl and Harriet Bosse, and his late engagement to Fanny Falkner.

Strindberg could be exceedingly charming and was capable of weeks or months of great passion and high spirits. But he always tired sooner or later of the women in his life. All of the moths attracted to his dark flame had their wings singed in the process.

MISS SPRIGGE is far more competent to narrate than to analyze or explain. Unfortunately she takes an all-kneeling attitude toward Strindberg, excusing his continuous villainies with the compassion of a doting mother. She does admit casually in a postscript that: "Strindberg's first biographers speak in terms of 'paranoia simplex chronica' and 'melancholia daemomaniaca' whereas nowadays we think of him as introverted, schizophrenic and the victim of an Oedipus complex."

Strindberg was all of that and then some. He was one of the founders of what an old instructor of mine used to call the "Ah,-God!-How-I-Suffer" school of literature. Feeding on Nietzsche and other half-mad decadents, he in turn helped to inspire crackpot Surrealism.

His letters were written with self-inflicted suffering and threats to agonize in good fortune as well as bad, in love and out, in wealth or in poverty, in sickness or in health.

In brief, despite glimmers of genius in his misty, formless plays, glimpses of social consciousness in his novels and his philosophy, passages of lyric beauty in all his writing, and occasional successes in bringing to life characters which are usually thoroughly repulsive, Strindberg added principally a note of supreme unbalance to modern writing.

Borderline Genius

HE IS the arch-typical "proof" of the smug theory of the Philistines that "madness and genuis are akin."

He has helped to lead astray into sterile realms of arty nonsense whole generations of young neurotics who imagine themselves to be aesthetes and intellectuals.

Despite all this, Strindberg is an exciting figure. Eugene O'Neill has admitted his great debt to him. Sean O'Casey has written:

"Strindberg, Strindberg, Strindberg, the greatest of them all! Barrie mumbling as he silvers his little model stars and gilds his little model suns, while Strindberg shakes flame from the living planets and the fixed stars.

"Ibsen can sit serenely in his Doll's House, while Strindberg is battling with his heaven and hell."

Such tribute from another excellent dramatist can almost shake one's conviction that Strindberg was incapable of writing a well-turned, tightly written, logically constructed play—incapable of order and selection because his own life was orderless and unselective.

Oscar Wilde and George Bernard Shaw have played with paradoxes, Strindberg lived them. And he will remain a controversial figure while criticism and psychiatry endure.—S. N.

A Lower Middle Class Tragedy

Othello Roams a British Suburb

THE BODY. By William Sansom. Harcourt, Brace. 215 pp. $2.75.

IN SELECTING delusional jealousy for the theme of his unusual first novel, William Sansom has chosen a potent poison.

Milton called jealousy "the injur'd lover's hell"; Dryden added, "the jaundice of the soul"; the Old Testament named it "cruel as the grave." And it was Shakespeare, of course, who wrote:

O! beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on: . . .

Othello, as you remember, did not beware. Once Iago had planted the seed of doubt concerning Cassio, the tragic fate of innocent Desdemona was assured.

WILLIAM SANSOM

Samson is no Shakespeare and his first novel is no "Othello." But in his own curious way he has written a parallel tragedy set in lower middle-class England (a bracket of English society strangely neglected by the essentially snobbish literati of socialized Albion).

His "Othello" is a middle-aged beauty shop proprietor named Henry Bishop, until recently utterly satisfied to putter about his garden, collect moths and enjoy his privacy and his wife. The innocent "Desdemona" of this tale is Madge, the comfortable, sensible, rather unromantic suburban housewife who, for some strange reason, has been satisfied with Henry and never once been guilty of a wandering eye.

And then there is "Cassio," in this instance a jovial extrovert named Charles Suffolk Diver, whose garden adjoins the Bishops. Diver is a car salesman, a player of practical jokes, a lover of beer and gaudy knicknacks who has the misfortune to see Madge in deshabille at her window and later invite the Bishops to dinner.

The Sum of Infidelity

THE READER is fully aware that nothing is brewing between Madge and Charley Diver. But little Henry Bishop is immediately in a complete tizzy. Like Othello, "who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves," he begins to search for clews. A cigarette butt unlike the sort his wife smokes, three pitiful little entries in her secret diary, a telephone number, unexplained moments in her life all add up in the crazed brain of Henry to infidelity.

Feeding upon this jealousy as upon some strong drug, Henry becomes a crafty detective. He enters Diver's apartment (first making the landlady slightly drunk). He offers an enameled blonde who lives in Diver's building a free hairdo at his emporium and then, wickedly, takes her dancing.

He acquires the habit of drinking one pint after another at the local pub, hoping to overhear gossip about the pair. He even stages a party on the river to throw his wife into Diver's company so that he can spy on them. In short, with no need of an Iago to nurse his suspicions, he becomes quite as mad as Othello.

Originally, I suspect, Sansom had in mind a tragic denouement to this tale. His present ending is, in fact, tragedy of another and deeper sort. But it lacks the katharsis of a good, clean, violent final curtain.

Critics Are Laudatory

ENGLISH book reviewers are admittedly far from reticent despite the reputation of their race for cool understatement. They rave at the drop of a review copy. However, some of the things they have written about William Sansom are literal truth.

He is a "talented and delightful writer," as Sir Osbert Sitwell says, and he has written a "sustained, powerful and ambitious" novel which is "eminently readable."

It may be a bit strong to say, as does V. S. Pritchett, that Sansom "is the only English writer who sees the physical world in a new way." But it is quite fair to add that he has "rescued the lower middle-class" from literary oblivion and misinterpretation. As James Stern says, here is "a Baedeker of the English suburban mind."

Add to these virtues one more. There is strong evidence that although Mr. Sansom is a reasonably youthful 35, he knows more about approaching senescence than many elderly writers who have experienced the phenomenon. His mid-mentality, middle-class, middle-aged protagonists are frightening prototypes of tens of millions of their sort the world over. The picture is not enticing.

As for influence, I suspect that William Sansom has read everything Graham Greene has ever written. What is credited with being new insight on his part is in part the Greene technique not only of observation but of maintaining taut suspense.

And Speaking of Suspense:

WHAT MANY "serious" novelists lack and often pretend to scorn is the quality of suspense. The reason we so often toss a book aside after a few chapters or sit unwilling through the third act of a play is because the novelist or playwright has told all we care to hear of the story. Neither his characters nor his plot can offer inner doors to deeper and more significant recesses.

Good detective story writers turned "serious" novelists usually retain their ability to hold the reader spellbound. Graham Greene ("The Heart of the Matter") is a case in point, and so is Richard Lockridge, whose new novel, "A Matter of Taste," to be published by Lippincott on August 17, will hold you as the Ancient Mariner once held the wedding guest.

But for a story to chill your marrow, give me "Burn, Witch, Burn!" by A. Merritt, published by Liveright back in 1933. In the 16 years since I read it I have not forgotten any important detail. It stays with me like a livid and delicate nightmare. If no reprint house has refused "Burn, Witch, Burn!," here is a distinct opportunity.

Runyon at His Best

Some Guys and Dolls Parade Posthumously

RUNYON FIRST AND LAST. By Damon Runyon. Lippincott. 255 pp. $2.75.

I AM sitting alone at Mindy's late one p. m. observing such guys and dolls as Miss Dawn Astra, Miss Beatrice Gee, Slats Slavin and various other hoofers, horse-gamblers and ticket scalpers when who should stroll over toward my table but a citizen missed more than somewhat in these parts.

The lights are low and maybe I need bifocals. On second thought maybe it is something I have had to drink.

"My goodness gracious, it is the late Damon Runyon," I say, feeling like somebody is pouring a bucket of ice cubes down my back.

"How's the old bookie editor?" he says in a voice not much above a whisper.

This is a very old jape indeed and is known to all and sundry, but I laugh heartily, remembering just in time not to proffer Mr. Runyon an alcoholic beverage, a form of comfort he has consistently declined since back in 1913 when he finds himself speeding Philadelphia-ward on a train he cannot remember boarding. And any citizen who goes to Philly except for pressing reasons is a ripe candidate for Alcoholics Anonymous.

Echo of Laughter

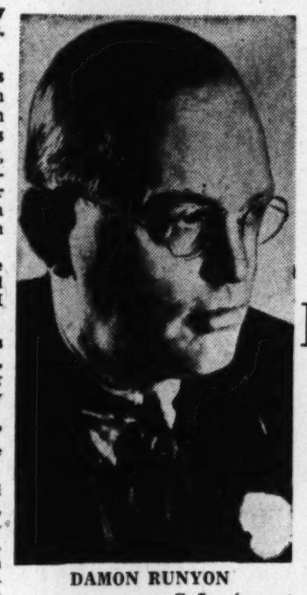
"I AM just batting my brains," I tell him," trying to think how to blurb your latest book, having used all my best adjectives touting your last six tomes which I am constantly bleating about in a number of prominent blats, saying I like your copy more than somewhat."

"Why not do it in Runyonese," says Mr. Runyon with a deep sigh which sounds like the wind whipping down Broadway at 4 a. m.

I am about to thank him for this brilliant suggestion when I look sharp, and he is gone. All that is left behind is faint but sympathetic laughter.

That guy, I say to myself, was a very interesting citizen, first and last. First and last he was a very good newspaperman. I will be frank to state to one and all that he will be standing well short of Mark Twain, but very close to Bret Harte when the literary roll is called up yonder. And his posthumous collection, "First and Last," is proof of same.

Grandpap an Indian fighter, his Old Man a roving newspaperman, here is Runyon joining the gay throng of the half-fed Fourth Estate at the age of 15. If it did not sound so much like an obit, which is what Mr. Clark Kinnaird's preface sounds like, I should devote precious space to Damon's hi-jinks near and far, at home and abroad, fighting for his country in the Philippines, and writing for his life in Denver, San Francisco and New York City.



DAMON RUNYON
. . . Coffee for one

Pueblo Delinquent

STRANGE indeed that the wayward pressman here ensconced in a posthumous edition was not hanged at an early age for trying to burn Chief Yellowhammer at the stake, and other juvenile delinquency practiced by the Boo Gang of his old home town (Pueblo, N. Mex.).

But I am willing to lay most of my ready that once a reader has given "Blonde Mink" the once-over-lightly he will continue through the 39 tales to "Just a Young Squirt," having made the pleasant acquaintance in passing of such guys, dolls and Indian fighters as Big Boy Blues, the Broadway Bruiser; Fat Fallon, the idolizing lieutenant; Soupbone Pew, who was informally executed, and particularly those long-suffering, half fictitious ancestors of the author, Grandpap, Grandmaw and "My Father."

So I asked the waiter at Mindy's for my check and I say to him, "Do you believe in ghosts?" And he gives me a look and points to the check.

"What's this big pot of coffee?" I say. "I don't drink the stuff." "Mr. Runyou does," said the waiter.

A Fascinating and Fearless Rascal

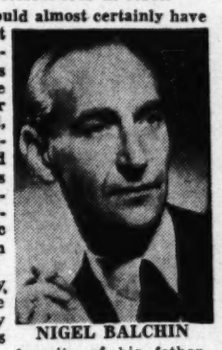
Brilliant Recreation of Borgia

By Sterling North

THE BORGIA TESTAMENT. By Nigel Balchin. Houghton Mifflin 312 pp. $3.

HAD Caesar Borgia written an autobiography as Benvenuto Cellini did, it might have been very much like this highly successful tour de force.

For instance, Borgia would almost certainly have spiked the slanders about his maligned sister Lucrezia, whom he loved in his own strange way despite the fact that he killed her beloved second husband, Alfonso of Aragon. Lucrezia, more sinned against than sinning, was a sweet and gentle creature compared to her merciless and opportunistic brother, a mere pawn in his bloody chess game.



NIGEL BALCHIN

Borgia undoubtedly would have denied, as he did in life, responsibility for the murder of his elder brother, Giovanni, favorite of his father, Pope Alexander VI.

The wily Duke would also have explained the nature of his dream to unify Italy after having unified Romagna; to thrust from the Italian boot all French and Spanish influence. He was merely 300 years before his time.

Being vain and ambitious, he would most certainly have denied that he was merely the talented tool of his father. His were the dreams; his the deeds; his the often murderous responsibility.

Machiavelli, who was born before and died long after Caesar Borgia, used the unscrupulous soldier and churchman as a model in writing his "Prince." Of Borgia he said: "Upon a thorough review therefore of the Duke's conduct and actions, I see nothing worthy of reprehension in them. For as he had a great spirit and vast designs, he could not have acted otherwise in his circumstances."

Expediency Above All

THE evil magic of this "testament," supposedly written while Borgia was in jail after the death of his father, is that it lures the reader into accepting the spirit of the times and the logic of Borgia.

If rival political leaders must be poisoned, what's to be done but poison them? If Lucrezia must now make a new match to secure the Spanish aid, unfortunate, but her last spouse must be chased home or murdered. And as for blackmailing Louis XII, the King of France, by holding up the annulment of his marriage, well, Louis was willing to pay the price of a small army, the hand of Charlotte d'Albret, daughter of the King of Navarre, and a few other trifles for such a favor from the Pope.

Besides, it was all in the larger cause of subjugating Faenza, Imola, Forli, Rilini, Pesaro, Piombino, Camarino and Urbino, whose rulers in any case were tyrants less capable of intelligent rule than Borgia.

Caesar Borgia was a fascinating and fearless rascal, and in this "autobiography" he is made to seem a highly convincing one as well.

Subsequent generations shocked by his casual acceptance of church honors and income while still a child, and his unscrupulous use of papal power in his ambitious maturity, forget the manners and morals of the era.

As many historians have testified, Borgia was not bloodthirsty. He was merely a master of expediency. His dream was a good one, but his methods were those of a prince of the Renaissance. He was not taken in by flattery. He was often willing to broadcast public admission of his crimes. And at least some of the debauchery and vice credited to him were the inventions of his enemies the Sforzas and other strong families he had tried to ruin.

A Mussolini Prototype

NIGEL BALCHIN contradicts the historians who have pictured Caesar Borgia's early youth as profligate. As a matter of history, unlike his father, he was only slightly interested in women (other than his own sister, Lucrezia). In fact he found it necessary from time to time to stage an orgy to quiet the detestable rumors that he was not a "normal" male.

Caesar, who rose through the power of one Pope (his father) and helped to elect another against whom his father had warned him, Julius II, died as he had lived, by the double-cross and the sword. Imprisoned first in Rome, then in Spain, he escaped to join his brother-in-law, the King of Navarre. Having been stripped of his income and his titles by both Julius and the King of France, he became the commander of Navarre's troops and died in bloody conflict at the age of 31—a minor Caesar, a little Alexander, the prototype of Mussolinis and Hitlers yet to come.

Nigel Balchin writes with great urbanity and charm. His is not so much a Sabatini cloak and dagger novel as a witty period piece, the slyest of sly satires based upon a rich knowledge of the period and of the man.

A brilliant novel, heady with the sights and sounds and smells of the Renaissance, an era more like our own than we are willing to admit.

Man Isn't Wicked, Only Immature

By Kathryn H. Stone

THE MATURE MIND. By H. A. Overstreet. W. W. Norton. 292 pp. $2.95.

OUT of the new psychological knowledge of our age, says Harry Overstreet, the well-known adult educator, has come the new maturity concept. We should, henceforth, regard human behavior, not as good or bad, wise or ignorant, but as mature or immature. Now that we know that adults are not adult, there is hope for us. Taken together, the new findings explain what is wrong with us, and best of all, show that adults can change.

Personality, which has been torn apart by our contemporary life and its specialists, must be reintegrated and resynthesized. The individual must be made into a newly organized, whole-seeing and whole-thinking person. He must be linked realistically to his environment, keeping the world of fantasy properly in leash, and must become both a willing participant in the chores of life and a creative participant in the bettering of life.

Mr. Overstreet's thesis is optimistic; it sounds good and reads quite convincingly. The catch is that it is done within his own personal set of criteria for maturity, which are so general and so dependent upon subjective judgment that they are far from the "yardstick" he claims them to be.

Although this reviewer is inclined to agree with the author's broad thesis and rambling philosophy, many will not. And when he hints that "maturity polls" might be a good thing, one is sure he has started a quarrel. One can hear the rising chorus, "Who is to call whom mature?" The cultural anthropologists have been busy pointing out in recent years that rapid social change has left us without a generally accepted standard of what adult behavior should be. Books like "The Mature Mind" should stimulate thinking toward such a standard.

Maturity is not, of course, anything new. From the mature minds of the centuries have come great insights. It is ironic that this century, with all of its new-found specialized knowledge and widespread literacy, seems to have such difficulty living up to these insights.

Certainly we must learn to apply our "new psychological knowledge" to real people and daily living. This is Overstreet's life work, and he pursues it with extraordinary vigor and much success.

Human misbehavior, however, in the opinion of this reviewer, may at times still call for a little old-fashioned language. One may at least suspect that the cathartic and regenerative effect of saying, "I have committed a sin—shown to be a sin by the moral experience of the centuries," is probably greater than from saying to one's self, "I have committed an immaturity."

In a Nutshell

THE BEST AMERICAN SHORT STORIES—1949, edited by Martha Foley. Houghton Mifflin. $3.50.

THE editor sees in the many new names in this annual "the vanguard of the much-heralded and long-awaited "postwar generation in literature." Actually, the 30 stories from about 20 magazines comprise a rather unimpressive collection. With a few exceptions, the writers' technique is merely adequate and their material is either shopworn or rather petty. Among the exceptions are Ruth Herschberger, Elizabeth Bishop, Jim Kjelgaard, Paul Bowles and Adele Dolokhov.

A MAN OF TASTE, by Philip Freund. Beechhurst. $3.50.

"CHRISTMAS IN WISCONSIN" is the best of the nine short stories in this volume. Concerning a young man whose first taste of love sours and turns him from a sexual innocent to a social ignoramus, it comes closest to meeting the rigid requirements of the short story form. The others, including the title story, seem more like exercises than finished products.

INTERNATIONAL WORLD WHO'S WHO, edited by G. G. Sampson. Sampson Publishing Co. $18.50.

THIS second edition contains 13,000 names, 90 per cent of them from the United States. The largest group represented is professors. The longest item is about an actor, Charles Coburn, and one of the short ones, 11 lines, is about G. B. Shaw. President Truman gets 30 lines.

THE WORLD OF EMMA LAZARUS. By H. E. Jacob. Schocken Books. 222 pp. Ill. $3.

EMMA LAZARUS, who lived from 1849 to 1887, as a poet and translator of Heine was one of the earliest Jewish figures to appear in American literature. Child of a sheltered home, it was not until 1881, when the first group of immigrants fleeing from Russian pogroms arrived in New York, that she identified herself with the cause of the Jewish people. This is the first biogaphy of Emma Lazarus, whose sonnet to the Statue of Liberty is engraved on the pedestal. Unfortunately, the biographer's labored style makes the reading hard going.

THE JOURNAL OF THE WALTERS ART GALLERY, 1948. Edited by Dorothy E. Miner. Walters Art Gallery, Baltimore. 86 pp. Ill. $2.50.

THE quarto Volume XI of the Walters Art Gallery Journal contains nine scholarly studies of treasures in the progressive gallery and two "notes." In subject matter the articles range from early Roman sculpture to a discussion of the genuine and false elements in two braces of seventeenth century Italian pistols, one pair of which is in the Metropolitan, and a terra cota statuette by Daumier that was recently acquired by the gallery. Profusely illustrated.

THE DEER STALKER, by Zane Grey. Harper. $2.50.

THE 46 novels of the late Zane Grey published by Harper have sold 24 million copies in the United States alone. This one, previously published only in serial form, is typical Grey. Its characters are stark black and white, it apotheosizes The Great Outdoors and it teaches A Lesson. There is a true-blue hero, a stanch-hearted girl friend named Sue and a beautiful refugee from the effete East who, "on the very rim of one of nature's miracles, becomes the master of her own destiny." That should give you an idea.

THE CORPSE SAID NO. By Barbara Frost. Coward-McCann. $2.50.

AN eccentric old woman hires Marka, a young woman lawyer, to write her will. Before she can sign it, the old woman is found strung up by the neck. Marka's secretary tries to talk her into investigating the murder, just to get her name in the papers, but it takes more than that to put her legal mind on the bloodhound trail. When the old woman's pretty granddaughter, who had saved Marka from a fire, becomes the chief suspect, however, Marka gets going. More corpses turn up, and the case gets mixed up with an art auction, before this hair-raiser finally lets your scalp relax. Something different in mysteries.

Down Easters Live a Rich, Cloying Life

COAST CALENDAR, by Robert P. Tristram Coffin. Bobbs-Merrill. $3.75.

PUT a large lobster pot on the fire and bring a quantity of salt water to boil. Add the signs of the Zodiac, one large farm family, a full measure of sentimentality, a heavy pinch of personified little animals, twelve folksy superstitions evenly meted out by the month, five servings of codfish with pork gravy and a quart of wild strawberry cream. Allow to simmer the seasons 'round. Sprinkle liberally with quaint sketches and serve up to the nostalgic reader just back from his vacation in Maine. 'In Coffin's "Coast Calendar' he will find all the Down East whims and customs and rugged living that he missed on that Bar Harbor hotel porch.

This literary calendar, illustrated by its distinguished author, relates the year's activities of the saltwater farmer. With "one foot on land and one in the sea . . . he brings home smelts in his cart, his corn in his clam-rocker . . . He pulls the rutabagas today but pulls in green lobsters tomorrow."

There is rare and beautiful prose in this bewitching volume, describing the sea in all its moods, storms and sunlight, wild geese and the cosset lamb, swamp alders and salt hay. But taken as a whole, the writing is too stylized and repetitious to be up to Coffin's best. The reader should not try to take the twelve months all in one dose; somehow life becomes a little cloying when the only thing that ever goes wrong is that Grandpa dies of old age.—KATHLEEN L. BARBER.

Guadalcanal Book Tells Both Sides

TODAY is the seventh anniversary of the first offensive by American ground forces in World War II, the assault on Guadalcanal, and today the Army announced publication of its official history of that campaign, "Guadalcanal: The First Offensive" (Government Printing Office, 413 pp., $4).

The book was written by Dr. John Miller, jr., a wartime Marine, and an Army announcement said that many hitherto top secret documents had been made available to him and would appear for the first time in this volume.

Both sides of the battle are thoroughly covered, including Japanese plans and techniques and what they thought of American methods. Also treated is the worthlessness of some of the weapons in the American arsenal.

"The volume is an honest attempt to paint a true picture of the Guadalcanal campaign and its place in the Pacific conflict," said the announcement. "To do so, it necessarily points out errors as well as successes . . ."

This is the second combat volume in the Army's historical project, "The United States Army in World War II."

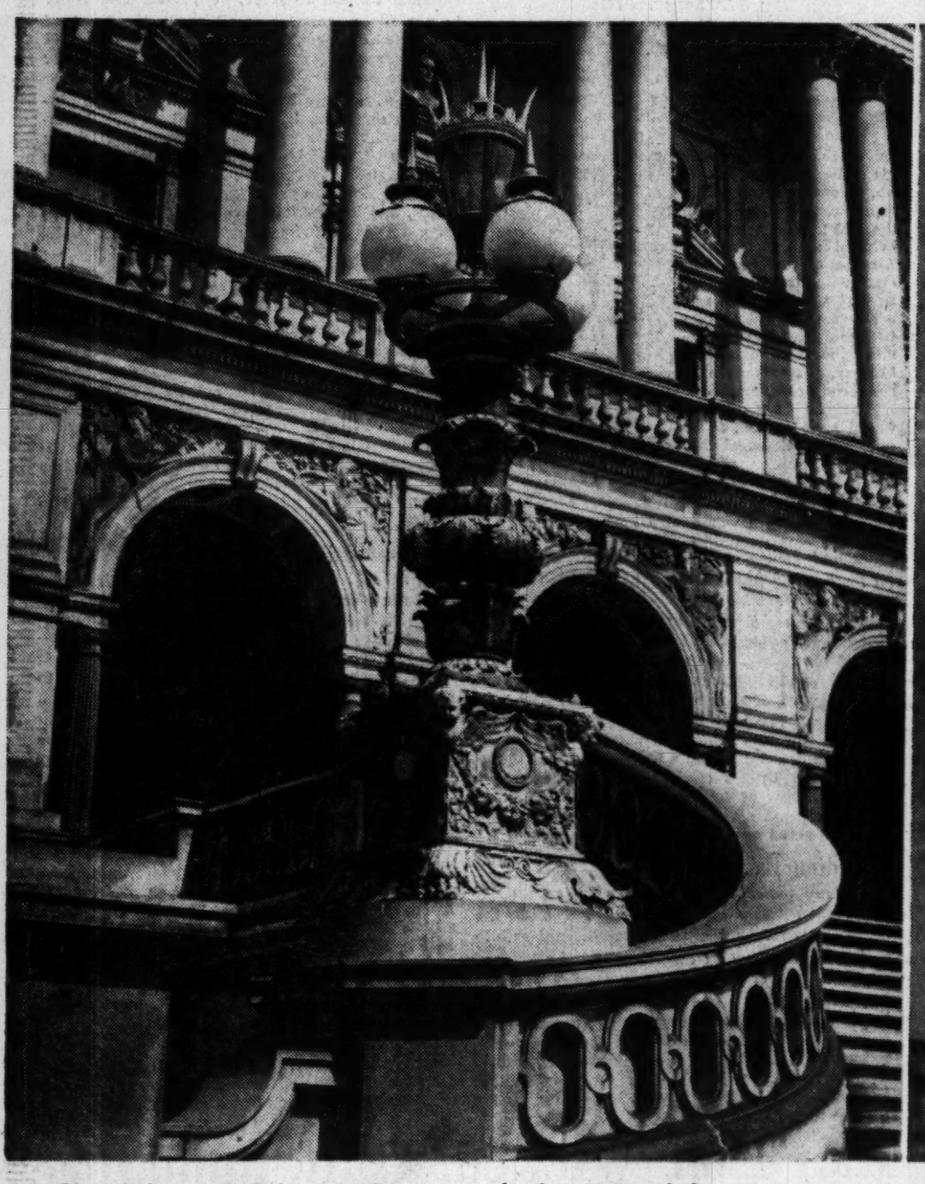
Capital Still Has 17 Gas Street Lights, But Nary a Lamplighter



These lights at the Library of Congress were installed before the building was completed in 1897, and the post is appropriately Victorian

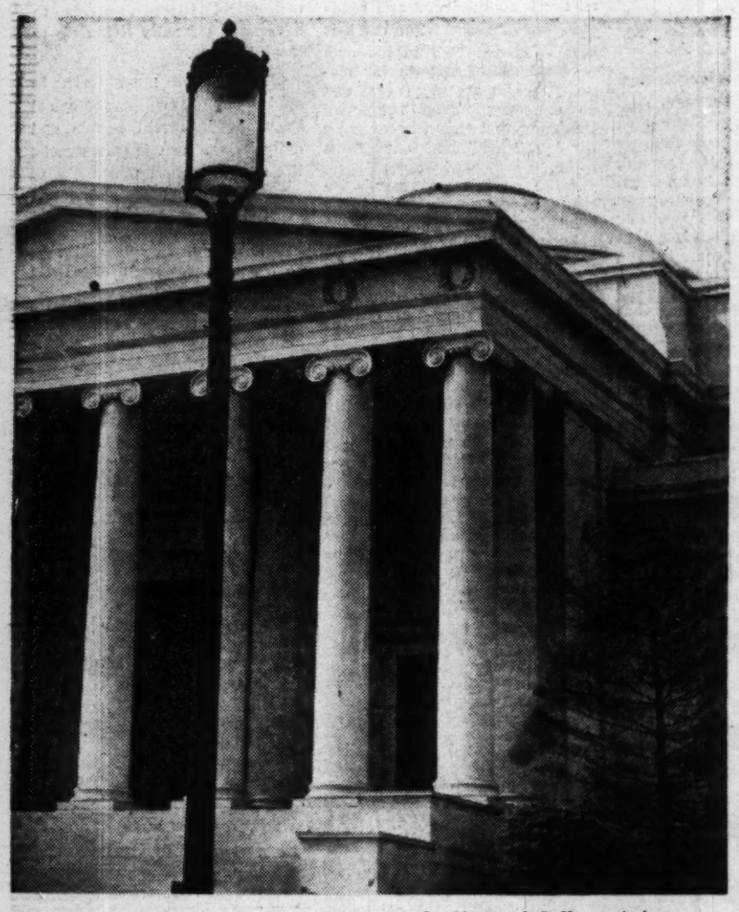
The lamps that light the grounds of the Library of Congress are less ornate than those on the steps. The designer was content with ornamental spikes



A classic lamp for a classic building—the National Gallery of Art

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

My tea is nearly ready and the sun has left the sky;
It's time to take the window to see Leerie going by;
For every night at teatime and before you take your seat,
With lantern and with ladder he comes posting up the street.

IF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S lamplighter were to come to Washington today, he would be startled at the number of street lamps that brighten the city at night.

So would the members of the City Council that on January 12, 1803, passed an ordinance directing the Mayor to "cause lamps to be placed on the most public avenues and streets, to supply them with oil, and to employ persons to attend to lighting them and keeping them in order."

Today there are approximately 35,700 lamp-posts with one or more lights to keep bright Washington's streets, alleys and bridges. Current is supplied by the Potomac Electric Power Co. in arrangement with the District government. The figure does not include fire alarm lights.

Capitol Dome Has 98

PEPCO also supplies current to about 1850 street lamps for units of the Federal Government. National Capital Parks is the largest of these operators of street lamps, but the War Department, Government Services, Inc., Federal Works Agency and National Capital Housing Authority all have street lamps.

The Capitol, with its own power plant, lights its old and new grounds with approximately 600 luminaires. Further brightening "the Hill" are the 98 1000-watt floodlights trained on the dome.

Old Leerie the Lamplighter would probably feel more at home, however, at Montrose Park, Georgetown, in the neighborhood of 29th and R sts. nw., are 17 gas lamps operated for National Capital Parks by the Washington Gas Light Co. Clock-controlled, like furnaces with thermostats, no Washington Leerie has had to light them since about 1935. How old they are, no one seems to know offhand. "Forty years, at least," is one estimate.

The first gas lamps were used in Washington in 1846, when street lamps burning Crutchett's Solar Gas, made from oil, were placed on Capitol Hill and North Capitol st. The light was considered satisfactory at the time, but the experiment failed because the gas could not be manufactured at a profit. Within seven years, however, gas lamps of another type began to replace the oil lamps, and by 1875 only gas lamps were to be found in town.

Arcs Failed General

SIX years later, in 1881, the first attempt at electric lighting was made. It was planned to use arc lamps, supplied with current from a generator in a sawmill, at the dedication of the statue of General Thomas in Thomas Circle. Though the project failed because of defects in the wiring system, electric street lamps were soon successfully used.

Early F st. merchants and property owners subscribed funds for arc lights for their street, and it is said the superior lighting gave the street a commercial advantage that it has enjoyed ever since.

Until 1884 all electric street lighting had been done by private companies at their own expense. The District government entered into a contract with a private company that year for lighting Pennsylvania ave. from the Capitol to the Treasury. The contract established a precedent of contractual arrangements with private companies that has been followed ever since.

DiMag's 2d Homer Wins for Yanks, 9-8

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

STEVE OWEN of the Giants is skeptical of first-year coaches and players in professional football and says: "When you make any mistakes in this league, they hang 'em up on the scoreboard." . . . England is claiming that its Bruce Woodstock-Lee Savold fight is more important in the heavyweight picture than New York's Charles-Lesnevich bout. At least it's more expensive. The London fight tickets are selling at $42 tops, with $16.50 as the highest-priced seat in New York . . . Dick Weik's pitching, the brightest item on the sad-sack Washington club, began to show improvement from the day he dispensed with his wind-up and threw every pitch as if runners were on base . . . Publicity-Conscious Bill Veeck of the Indians reportedly is paying $300 a week to Charley Lapica the flagpole sitter who has vowed not to descend until Cleveland leads the league . . . When Jackie Robinson told Congress' Un-American Activities Committee that, among other things, he planned to ask Branch Rickey for a raise, it was the first time a ballplayer announced under oath that he wanted more money . . . George S. May, the man who put up the $62,000 prize money for the golfers in the Tam O'Shanter Open at Chicago, on Friday lost $1000 to Lloyd Mangrum betting he wouldn't sink putts for birdies . . . but Mangrum failed to drop a five-foot putt on the last hole that would have netted him an extra thousand for tying the course record of 63.

POVICH

THE RED SOX SURGE of the past week has dropped their odds in the pennant race from 5 to 1, to 4 to 1. The Yankees are still rated even-money bets to lead the league and the odds against the Indians are static at 3 to 1 . . . In the National League, the Cardinals and Dodgers are still equal pennant favorites at 6 to 5 . . . On the day Ellis Kinder struck out 14 Browns at Boston last week, the price-makers were quoting their highest baseball odds of the season on a single game with Boston the 4-to-1 choice . . . Bob Fitzsimmons it was who coined the phrase "The bigger they come the harder they fall," while training for Jim Jeffries. Fitz weighed 161, Jeffries 220 . . . Jeffries' rejoinder was classic, too. He said: "The smaller they are, the farther I knock 'em" . . . The $23,560 Sam Snead has won in 1949 tournaments breaks down to the interesting figure of $5.55 for every stroke he has taken in his 61 rounds of competition . . . Only four of the 14 Liberty ships named for noted sports figures during the war, are still sailing the seas. They are the Knute Rockne, the George Gipp, the Charles Paddock and the William Edwards . . . Out of commission are the ships named for Jim Corbett, Percy Houghton, John L. Sullivan, Lou Gehrig, Christy Mathewson, Eddie Grant, Abner Doubleday, John McGraw, Walter Camp and Hobey Baker.

THE BALTIMORE COLTS, who sold 6000 season tickets for their 1948 home schedule, report 7000 already sold for this season and envision a total sale of nearly 9000 . . . In October, the All-America Conference will announce that Houston or Dallas, Tex., will be given a league franchise in 1950 . . . Coach Mel Harder showed Early Wynn how to put more zip on his fast ball by throwing it slower, with more wrist action . . . Buck Newsom once denied that he wasn't throwing as hard as in former years with the quip: "I'm throwing as hard, but the ball doesn't go as fast." . . . Guy Ambassador, one of the favorites in Wednesday's $67,000 Hambletonian trotting stake, is bucking a jinx. No son of a Hambletonian winner ever won it, and Guy Ambassador was sired by the 1942 winner, The Ambassador . . . Nat Scout Cecil Travis reports he has signed Jimmy Jarrett, 17-year-old southpaw of Tate, Ga., who hasn't been beaten in his last 20 games, averaging 12 strikeouts per game . . . Even with favorable tides, Shirley May France will have to swim at least 35 miles to cross the 20-mile English Channel. When Gertrude Ederle set the record in 1926 it was estimated she swam 39 miles.

THE NATS' CHATTANOOGA club is so stripped of talent by injuries that Catcher Ralph Weigel is playing third base, Catcher Andy Fleitas is playing second, and Manager Walters is doing the catching . . . The Moscow newspaper Soviet Sport, deriding athletes of Western nations, boasts: "The moral quality that characterizes the tactical spirit of our football is high . . . almost every one of our players without hesitation would pass the ball to a partner if that one had a slightly greater chance to make a goal." . . . In the United States we don't boast about that; we merely accept it as the routine thing to do . . . The Yankees, ruined the other day by the four hits of Detroit's Pat Mullin, last June refused to trade Second Baseman George Stirnweiss to the Tigers for Mullin . . . When he meets Gus Lesnevich for the N. B. A. version of the world's heavyweight title, Ezzard Charles will be meeting the man who refused to give him a shot at the light-heavy crown. The latest odds quote Charles the 3-to-1 favorite . . . The Yankee players like Manager Casey Stengel who lets them swing against those fat 2-and-0 pitches, so helpful to the batting averages . . . Stock in Chicago trotting tracks dropped last week when the State Legislature legalized night running races.

NEAR MISS—First Baseman Charlie Kress of the White Sox almost plunges into the Nats' dugout trying to stab Sam Dente's pop foul in the fourth inning yesterday, but the ball (arrow) fell away from him. Coming in to help Kress is Catcher Ed Malone as Johnny Simmons (foreground), Sherry Robertson (background) and other Nats scatter on the bench. The Chicagoans made it two straight, beating the Nats in 12 innings, 6-5

Browns' Big Lead Wiped Out by Six Circuit Hits

New York, Aug. 6 (AP).—The New York Yankees looked like the bombers of old today as they blasted out six home runs to overpower the St. Louis Browns, 9-8.

Successive ninth inning home runs by Tommy Henrich and Joe DiMaggio (his second of the game) broke up the ball game and increased the Yank's American League lead over the Cleveland Indians to four games.

The Indians bowed, 2-0 to the Philadelphia Athletics.

The Browns took an early 8-3 lead on home runs by Paul Lehner, Sherm Lollar and Gerry Priddy. Then the Yanks displayed their fireworks.

Yogi Berra started things with his fifteenth homer in the third. Phil Rizzuto and DiMaggio hit for the circuit in the fifth. Rizzuto socked his second, with one on, in the sixth and then Henrich and DiMaggio staged the thrilling climax.

Henrich unloaded his twentieth of the season off Lefty Joe Ostrowski after one out in the ninth.

Cliff Fannin took over and DiMaggio belted Fannin's first pitch into the left field stands to win the game.

Lefty Joe Page, fourth Yankee Pitcher, gained credit for the victory, his tenth. The total of nine homers fell one shy of the major League record for most home runs by two clubs in one game.

Philadelphia, Aug. 6 (AP).—Dick Fowler outpitched Bob Lemon today as the Philadelphia Athletics took a 2-to-0 verdict over the Cleveland Indians.

The second-place Indians are now only one and one-half games ahead of Boston.

Fowler's win was his eleventh of the year and his second consecutive shutout and fourth victory over the Indians. He was in serious trouble only in the third and fourth innings.

Mike Guerra singled, Fowler sacrificed and Wally Moses' single accounted for the A's first run in the second inning. Guerra tripled in the seventh, scoring Nelson Fox with the only other run of the game.

Fowler previously shut out Cleveland, 8 to 0, July 15 at Cleveland.

Nats Lose in 12th, 6 to 5

Two-Base Bunt Sets Up Chisox Winning Run

By Morris Siegel

Post Reporter

The Nats did not win again yesterday, which is hardly news, but the manner in which the Chicago White Sox beat them contained several new twists.

1. First of all, the locals lasted 12 innings before succumbing, 6-5. They usually get beat in the customary nine.
2. The winning run stemmed from a bunt which turned out to be not a bunt, but a double. That's not all.
3. The Sox tied the score in the sixth inning when one of their employes singled trying to duck away from an inside pitch.

All of this added up to the "bizarre" affair which goes into the records merely as another Washington defeat, this latest being No. 63 and the sixth in a row.

Ed Klieman, who started out with the Nats this season and wound up with the Sox by way of New York, benefited from the strange antics to win his second game, achieving it in a six-inning relief role.

Klieman also happens to be the third former Nat employee to beat his old team in five days. Early Wynn did it for Cleveland Tuesday and Mickey Haefner heaped indignity on his former pals Friday evening.

Haynes Loses Seventh

Joe Haynes, who toiled for the Sox last year, was the personal victim. He pitched the last three innings, long enough to be tagged with his seventh loss. He's won only two since his name has been on the Griffith Stadium payroll.

Haynes' downfall started in the twelfth when Dave Philley's "bunt" plopped over Eddie Robinson's head for the cheesiest double this side of Wisconsin. One out later, Cass Michaels stroked a legitimate two-bagger to dissolve the stalemate.

Ray Scarborough started out doing the Nats' pitching and was removed for a pinch-hitter in the ninth when the Nats launched a bunting attack against Klieman, just recovering from a knee operation, which produced two runs and a tie score.

The Nats staked Scarborough to a 3-0 lead in the second inning on three of their nine hits. Scarborough himself batted in one of the runs, singling to score Sam Dente whose double had already scored Bob Ortiz and Eddie Robinson, on base with an infield hit and a walk, respectively.

This damage was done at the expense of Lefthander Bob Kuzava, who was trying to beat the Nats for the fourth time and also record his ninth success. He went out for a pinch-hitter in the seventh

Bosox Blank Tigers, 3-0, For 7 in Row

Boston, Aug. 6 (AP).—Left Hander Mel Parnell became the major leagues' first 16-game winner today as he pitched Boston's Red Sox to their seventh consecutive victory, a convincing 3-0 decision over the Detroit Tigers.

The stylish southpaw turned back the Tigers with five hits. For the second time in as many games the Detroiters were unable to advance anyone to third base.

It was the seventh successive route-going job by Boston pitchers and their 23d such performance in their last 32 games.

The Sox racked up a run in the opening inning which would have been enough to win. Ted Williams shot a liner into right field which glanced off the front of the stands—missing a home run by inches—and caromed away from Vic Wertz for a triple.

Dom DiMaggio got two singles, one in the first and another in the seventh, which ran his consecutive hitting streak through 33 games.

The Sox added a second run in the sixth on Johnny Pesky's line double over shortstop and Bob Doerr's double off the fence in left center.

Those two scores were against the starting Virgil Trucks who tried for his fourteenth victory but lost his eighth game.

Cards Bow, 3-1, Miss Chance To Up Lead

St. Louis, Aug. 6 (AP).—With former Mexican Leaguer Adrian Zabala turning in a six-hit pitching job, the New York Giants defeated the league-leading St. Louis Cardinals 3-1 tonight before a crowd of 28,193.

This left the Redbirds still a half game ahead of the runner-up Brooklyn Dodgers, who lost to Cincinnati this afternoon.

Zabala had a three-hitter until the Cardinals scored their lone run in the eighth on singles by Tommy Glaviano and Red Schoendienst and a double by Stan Musial.

Whitey Lockman doubled down the left field line in the first inning, driving in Hank Thompson with the first run. Thompson singled as the inning started.

A double against the right-field pavilion screen by Sid Gordon and a single by Irvin in the fourth produced the Giants' second run.

Singles by Bill Rigney, Ray Mueller and Thompson were good for another run in the sixth.

Umpire 'Robs' Jones of Homer

St. Louis, Aug. 6 (AP).—First Baseman Nippy Jones of the St. Louis Cardinals hit a home run tonight that didn't count.

He slammed a pitch by Pitcher Adrian Zabala of the New York Giants into the left-field bleachers in the first inning. However, Umpire Jocko Conlan had called a balk on Zabala a moment before the pitch and ruled the pitch—and the homer—did not count.

Jones went back to the plate and then flied out to center field for the third out, leaving Red Schoendienst stranded on first. The Giants were leading, 1-0,

Griffs Will Bring Up 2 More Cubans

Making an obvious play for Latin-American clientele, the Nats yesterday announced they would bring up two more Cuban ball players next month.

Joining Roberto Ortiz and Enrique Gonzales on Senor Jose Kuhel's "beisbol" team in September will be pitchers Conrad Marrero and Julio Ramos.

Both Muchachos have impressive minor league records. Marrero has won 21 and lost 4 for Havana in the Florida International League while Ramos has won 19 and lost 2 for Henderson in the East Texas circuit.

If they are found wanting in their baseball ability, the newcomers will give free rhumba lessons between games of a doubleheader.

Reds Get Five In 8th, Beat Dodgers, 5-2

Cincinnati, Aug. 6 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds scored five runs in the eighth inning today with the aid of three errors by Third Baseman Billy Cox to snap a six-game Brooklyn Dodgers' winning streak, 5 to 2.

Johnny Wyrostek homered to start the eighth for the Reds, and Cox then came up with a siege of butter fingers.

Cox fumbled Jimmy Bloodworth's grounder. The Dodger third sacker then booted Herm Wehmeier's sacrifice bunt. Harry Walker beat out a bunt to Cox to load the bases.

Erv Palica relieved Ralph Branca at this point and Lloyd Merriman greeted him with a two-run single to put the Reds in front, 3-2.

Grady Hatton bunted and Palica tossed to third but Cox dropped the ball for his third error and the bases again were loaded. Palica disposed of the next two batters but Ted Kluzewski followed with a two-run single to left. Wyrostek, up for the second time, flied out to end the inning.

Bewitch Wins $28,000 Race

Chicago, Aug. 6 (AP).—Calumet Farm's Bewitch, queen of the Nation's fillies as a juvenile two years ago, today charged to a half length victory over the speedy Dandilly in the $28,200 Misty Isle Handicap at Washington Park.

Third place went to Louis Lee Haggin II's Stole, a 50-to-1-shot, while Lithe, owned by Hal Price Headley, Lexington, Ky., finished fourth in the 12-horse field.

Bewitch was scheduled to run with the highly regarded Two Lea as an entry, but the latter was scratched. The crowd of 22,067, however, established the Calumet colorbearer a 7-5 favorite and she returned $4.80, 3.40 and 2.80.

Dandilly, which had scored a smashing upset triumph in the Myrtlewood Handicap at Arlington Park, paid $7.40 and $5.80, while Stole returned $12 to show.

Bewitch, ridden by Jockey Steve Brooks, made amends for her failure to triumph in only one race in nine starts this year. She added $19,200 to Calumet Farm's bulging bankroll. Her time for the seven furlongs was 1:22 2-5, only two-fifths of a second slower than Rippey's track record and was her best performance at that distance.

Dave Moon Back At Colts' Grid Camp

Westminster, Md., Aug. 6 (AP).—Dave Moon, a 205-pound former fullback at Southern Methodist, arrived today at the Baltimore Colts' training camp after a detour.

Moon was a Colt draftee but was sent to the Chicago Hornets as part of an All-America Conference strengthening move. The Hornets cut him loose after two weeks' trial.

Porterfield Back—Yanks Sell Jack Phillips

New York, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—The New York Yankees once again neatly circumvented baseball's "no deals after June 15 rule" today when they waived First Baseman Jackie Phillips out of the American League and sold him to the Pittsburgh Pirates for a reported $50,000.

Using the same technique as they did in 1945 when they waived Pitcher Hank Borowy out of the league and sent him to the Chicago Cubs for $100,000. The Yankees got the other clubs in the American League to pass on Phillips' services.

That was maneuvered in spite of the fact that almost any club in the league, particularly the Detroit Tigers, could have used Phillips, a promising rookie who boasts a hefty .311 batting average for 43 games.

The Pirates announced they were asking waivers on the veteran Hugh Casey Monday to give him his unconditional release to make room for Phillips.

Both Pirate first basemen, Jack Stevens and John Hopp, are currently on the injured list. Phillips joins his new mates tomorrow.

The Yankees also recalled Pitcher Bob Porterfield from Newark.

It Takes a 2-Base Bunt To Beat Nats in 12th, 6-5

when the Chicagoans tied the score.

Four singles broke up Scarborough's no-hit no-run game and brought the Hose their first two runs in the fourth inning. In the seventh, they used two more of their 14 hits and an infield out to tie the score.

With Eddie Malone on second, the Sox wheeled in Gus Zernial to pinch hit for Kuzava. Trying to duck away from an inside pitch, Zernial didn't and it was fortunate for the Sox that he didn't. The ball hit his bat and plopped into right field for a single and Malone romped in to tie the count at 3-3.

Singles by Luke Appling and Cass Michaels and Scarborough's wild toss to first on Charlie Kress' sacrifice brought in the fourth Sox run in the eighth, and George Metkovich's fly to left a moment later made it 5-3.

Refusing to yield in nine innings, the Nats got two runs to tie the score in their half of the ninth. Jake Early started it with a walk and Buddy Lewis caught Floyd Baker flatfooted at third base with a bunt. Eddie Yost also beat out a bunt to fill the bases.

The first run trickled in when Sherry Robertson forced Yost at second and Lewis romped home to deadlock the game after Sam Mele had skied to right.

After that, the Nat got only one more hit off Klieman.

IN SHORT—The Marine Reserve's Fifth Infantry assault platoon will perform between games of today's double-header. If necessary, they'll stick around and help the Nats try to lick the Chisox . . . It's been more than two months since the Nats have won two straight. Since mid-June, when they began their nosedive, they've won only 8 out of 45 . . . 500 youngsters from Richmond, Va., attended the game yesterday as guests of the ball park and the Richmond Sportsmen's Club . . . As expected, Appling broke the record for longevity at shortstop. He's now played 2154. Another statistical note on Luscious Luke: his sixth inning single was his 100th hit of the year . . . Mickey Harris, still trying to win his first game for the Nats, and Paul Calvert, trying to crack a nine-game personal losing streak, toil in today's twin bill . . . it's Randy Gumpert and Bill Pierce for the high and mighty (sixth place) Sox.

Parkside Champion

Bobby Payne hurled a three hitter yesterday to pace Parkside Grill to a 3-to-0 shutout over Providence Life Insurance Co., and the championship of the D. C. Recreation Department Softball League No. 8.

Kiner Slams 28th Homer To Tie Game

Pittsburgh, Aug. 6 (AP).—Dick Sisler's pinch single scored Del Ennis from second with two out in the ninth inning today to give the Philadelphia Phils a 4 to 3 edge over Pittsburgh and their seventh win over the Pirates by a one-run margin this season.

Ralph Kiner's twenty-eighth home run with Dino Restelli on base in the eighth enabled the Pirates to tie the count at 3-3. Kiner's four bagger sent Ken Heintzleman to the showers. Jim Konstanty, who relieved him, got credit for his fourth win against four losses.

Andy Seminick and Ennis each hit their fifteenth homers of the season early in the game to put the Phils in front. Dino Restelli, the rookie Pirate outfielder, hit his eleventh home run in the fifth.

Mulloy Ousts Billy Talbert

South Orange, N. J., Aug. 6 (AP).—Gardner Mulloy, who at 34 is the oldest among the Nation's first 25 ranking players, today, upset top seeded Billy Talbert of New York, 3—6, 6—3, 6—2, 6—4 to reach the final bracket of the twenty-third annual Eastern Grass Court championships.

Mulloy, who hails from Coral Gables, Fla., and is ranked eighth nationally will meet Art Larsen of San Francisco in the final tomorrow here at the Orange Lawn Tennis Club.

The women's final, also scheduled for tomorrow, will pit top seeded Doris Hart of Jacksonville, Fla., against Shirley Frey of Akron, Ohio.

Gussie Moran of Santa Monica, Calif., and Pat Canning Todd of La Jolla, 6—4, 3—6, 6—4, earlier today.

In losing to Mulloy, Talbert played his worst tennis of the week. He seemed extremely tired and could do comparatively little against Mulloy after the opening set. Mulloy was particularly good at the net and at the service line. He scored point after point with well placed passing shots and cross court volleys off his forehand.

Frank Parker and Pancho Gonzales of Los Angeles, the Wimbledon double champions, will meet Talbert and Mulloy, three times winner of the national doubles title, in the doubles final tomorrow.

Special to The Post

New York, Aug. 6.—Washington powered its way to the International Typographical Union baseball championship with effortless victories over Detroit, 20-5, and New York, 11-0, here today for their fifth and sixth wins in seven games.

Although Washington's heavy hitters didn't need it, Harry Wolfe continued to supply the thirty-fifth tournament's best pitching.

Wolfe, 23-year-old apprentice on the Washington News, hurled a three-hitter against New York in the finale at the Polo Grounds. In the Detroit game in the morning, he pitched six scoreless innings and retired with a 15-0 lead, to rest up for the New Yorkers.

In the tourney opener, Wolfe blanked Boston, defending champions, 11-0, with two hits. He wasn't scored on in the 24 innings he worked and was named the tournament's most valuable player.

Washington pounded out 24 hits against Detroit in its semifinal test, avenging its only loss of the week. Detroit went into the game holding a 4-1 decision over Washington but quickly was out of it.

Two young Washington Post printers, Outfielders Bill Garner and Al Buschling, accounted for nine of the 24 hits, with a homer by the latter included. First Baseman Bill Valentine also hit for the circuit against Detroit. Garner, with 16 hits in 29 trips, was the second leading hitter in the tourney.

The other outfielder, Frank Ciango, had five for five in the morning game and scored five times.

Garner and Buschling also led the 10-hit attack against New York to wrap up Washington's eighteenth ITU championship. The Columbians returned to the winner's circle for the first time since 1941.

Paul Calvert Doubles as Interpreter

IT WON'T be absolutely necessary to understand Spanish to watch the Nats play next month, but it'll help. In addition to the two Cubans now on the roster and the pair coming up soon, Scout Joe Cambria has been dispatched to the rum and coke territory to rustle up two more for September delivery . . . As long as the Latin-American traffic continues, Paul Calvert is certain to remain on the roster, either as a pitcher or as an interpreter since Spanish is one of the five languages the scholarly Canadian commands . . . The fans selection of Cass Michaels over Gerry Priddy as the All-Star second baseman precipitated a blast from the editor of a local night-life publication, of all people . . . Eddie Yost's ankle injury in June made a better pitcher out of Dick Weik. While Yost was recuperating, he would come out to the ballpark at 5 o'clock each day and have Weik toss batting practice to him . . . Weik gained control and Yost sharpened his batting eye.

JIM TATUM has never met Bob Feller, but he's indebted to him for a job nevertheless . . . It happened in 1937 when Maryland's present football coach applied for the job as head baseball coach at Cornell . . . Since he was doing a little scouting for Cleveland, Tatum asked Alva Bradley, then Cleveland owner, for a letter of recommendation. Bradley not only recommended Tatum, but also promised Cornell officials he'd bring the Indians to Ithaca for an exhibition with Feller pitching. The lure of Feller sealed the deal . . . Tatum got the job and the Indians kept their promise. The park was sold out three weeks in advance, but it rained all morning the day of the game and the game had to be cancelled . . . "I don't know whether they've refunded all that money yet," Tatum remarked the other night recalling the incident . . .

FIGURE filberts will be interested to know that Luke Appling has made 4413 putouts, 7330 assists and 661 errors in playing 2154 games at shortstop in 20 years for the White Sox. . . . Bob Feller is the only player in either major league who rooms alone. The Cleveland pitcher gets so many phone calls that he can't get a teammate to room with him. . . . GW Football Coach Bo Rowland will have to represent the southern part of Arkansas all by himself in a few weeks. The other constituent from those parts, Touchdown Club President Carrol Bird, is headed back there to live. . . .

IF YOU'RE interested in making something out of nothing, see Fred Hutchinson. The Detroit Tigers pitcher has been making quite a success out of his "nothing" ball pitching . . . He's won five in a row and permitted only 2 runs in the last 33 innings since he quit trying to throw the ball by the batters . . . "I simply throw it up to the plate and let 'em hit it," he explained following his shutout of the Nats here last week . . . "I and the batters know that I can't hurt them if I hit them. As a result, everybody envisions himself as a home run hitter against me and all they do is pop up or fly out. I'm glad I don't have a fast ball" . . . William and Mary has beaten every Virginny team it has played since 1940 . . . As a sideline in the winter, Nat Pitcher Mickey Harris sells calendars. Made $4000 in two months last year.

Horseshoe Tourney

Bob Compher won the seventh annual Maryland Recreation department horseshoe tournament, yesterday, by defeating Tom Rhodes in the final playoff, 50-17, at the Rock Creek Recreation Center. The victory was Compher's fourth in five years.

Sam Snead, Nary Shoot 5-Under 67s

By Jerry Liska

Chicago, Aug. 6 (AP).—Harry Todd of Dallas, Tex., knocking brilliant approaches for a seven-under-par 65, today barged within a stroke of yesterday's pace setter, Lloyd Mangrum, as the first round of the $20,000 All-American professional tourney ended.

Todd, whose most recent bid to fame was the Ozark Open he won last fall at Springfield, Mo., banged home eight birdies to finish two taps ahead of leading money winner Sammy Snead and Bill Nary of Los Angeles, who had 67s.

A throng of 7000 wandered over gaily bedecked Tam 'O Shanter course as some 120 tardy starters rushed after the eight-under-par 64 Mangrum posted in yesterday's first installment of the opening round.

Turnesa, Harbert at 66

The actual third spot holders, ahead of Snead and Nary, were Chick Harbert and Jim Turnesa, who fashioned 66s yesterday.

In the concurrent All-American Amateur and Women's Open competition, the day's top finishers also failed to dislodge yesterday's pacesetters.

The best amateur today with a modest par-equaling 72 was Ray Chamberlin of Waukegan, Ill. That was five strokes behind the 67 fashioned yesterday by Julius Boros of West Hartford, Conn., and Chicago's John (Pick) Wagner. And it was good for only fifth spot behind the 68 fired yesterday by Al Besselink of Chicago and Defending Champion Frank Stranhan's 70.

Topping the 18 women who played today was professional Betty Jameson of San Antonio, Tex., with 77.

It was good for second in the two-day first-round activity, but five strokes behind the four-under-par 72 stroked yesterday by Louise Suggs, professional from Carrollton, Ga. Defending Champion Babe Zaharias of Denver wound up in a six-way tie for twelfth with a wobbly 82.

Tomorrow, a field of approximately 125 pros, 40 amateurs and 30 women, screened from an original field of some 390, will tackle the second round of the 72-hole medal test.

While Snead was complaining that cross winds and hard greens slowed up his game "at least two strokes," Todd turned in his two-better-than-Sammy with a 33-32 card for Tam's par 36-36—72, 6918-yard layout.

Ted Rhodes, slender Negro shooter from Los Angeles, was fourth in today's round with a 68, his best round for a major tournament. That, however, bracketed him with Bob Fretland of Duluth, Minn.; Pete Cooper of Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla., and Fred Haas, jr., of New Orleans, four strokes off the pace in the overall first-round standings.

Three came home with 69s today, including Henry Ransom of St. Andrews, Ill., Herman Keiser of Chicago and Jim Ferrier of San Francisco.

National Open Champion Cary Middlecoff, established with Snead as a premeet favorite, needed 71 taps for the first round and shared that niche with six other players today and eight holdovers from yesterday.

D. C. Swim Titles On Line

Four District of Columbia AAU champions—Irving Bridgers, Barbara McCutcheon, Ellen Oberti and Bettie Roland—will defend senior outdoor swim titles Wednesday night as a feature of the invitational meet at Congressional Country Club pool.

Bridgers and Miss McCutcheon, both of Ambassador, seek to retain honors for another year in the men's high-board and women's low-board diving, while their teammate, Miss Oberti, hopes to hold the 200-yard freestyle diadem for a second consecutive time. Miss Roland, star of the Takoma Park team, is a favorite to repeat in the 150-yard individual medley swim.

Also at stake are the men's 200 freestyle and 150-yard individual medley. There will be no defending titlist in these events as Jan Vandersluis, a dual winner from Takoma last summer, recently entered the Naval Academy.

The meet is open to the public and starts at 7 p. m.

SWING AND A MISS—So what if 6-year-old Harry Anderson, jr., of 3010 Ordway st. nw., does miss a forehand shot. After all Jack Kramer and Bobby Riggs weren't champs when they were his age either. Harry is one of the many youngsters learning the tennis racket out at Congressional Country Club under Pro Hank Danilowicz. Over on the right, Penny McIntyre, 9, of 9701 Elroad rd., teams up with Harry for a set of doubles against Dick Everett, 5, and Terry Anderson, 8, Harry's sister. High Heels, Baseball Just Don't Mix; Ask the Lady, She Breaks Ankle

New Orleans, Aug. 6 (AP).—A 41-year-old housewife today spoke of her sudden distaste for baseball when she tried to play the game in high heels.

Mrs. Nelson Norman of Simmesport glanced at a plaster cast on her right leg as she rested in Charity Hospital.

"All my life I've never had a baseball bat in my hand," she complained. "Then I reach 41 years old and try to see how it is."

In Simmesport last Wednesday night, she said, a few women decided to try their hand before the menfolk got down to the business of base hits and pop flies in their game.

"Right away it was my time to bat," she said. "I am sure it was the first ball they threw that I hit."

As she tore at first base and curved around for second, her high-heeled slipper twisted on the first base sack. That did it. She's got a broken right ankle.

Charles 4-1 Over Gus in NBA Title Bout

New York, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Ezzard Charles, the new NBA heavyweight champion, will make the quickest first defense of the title in history when he meets Gus Lesnevich at Yankee Stadium Wednesday night, in the new International Boxing Club's first outdoor New York show.

Charles of Cincinnati, who is recognized as champion only by the National Boxing Association, currently is favored at 4-1 to beat his 34-year-old challenger from Cliffside, N. J.

Lesnevich formerly was world light heavyweight champion.

Although their 15-round bout will be presented in the Bronx, it will not be recognized as a title fight by the New York State Athletic Commission, which is not a member of the NBA.

Charles won the NBA version of the title by outpointing 35-year-old Jersey Joe Walcott in Chicago June 22. The NBA had sanctioned Charles and Walcott as outstanding contestants for the crown left vacant by Joe Louis' retirement in March.

Louis now is boxing director of the International Club, which expects a crowd of 25,000 and a gate of $150,000 Wednesday night. The club, headed by wealthy, young James D. Norris, staged the Charles-Walcott bout in Chicago, and the Jake LaMotta-Cerdan middleweight title fight in Detroit.

Charles, 28, is favored over Lesnevich because he is expected to have more stamina than Russian Gus, who tried in the closing rounds of his last fight with Joey Maxim for the American light heavyweight title in Cincinnati in May. Maxim of Cleveland won the 15-round decision.

How to Cultivate a Tennis 'Farm'

Danilowicz Hit With Kids

By Jules Loh

"BE SURE to tell Hank I did that" said the little boy as he executed a well-stroked forehand and lofted the ball over the net.

The 6-year-old sunsuit-clad tennis player had a reason for wanting him to know. Hank might reward him with a soda for his achievement. Hank sometimes does.

Hank is Henry Danilowicz, the tennis professional at Congressional Country Club. The outspoken lad who was hoping for a soda was little Harry Loy Anderson, one of the pupils in Hank's tennis class.

The class is unique in local country club circles. Matter of fact it's hard to find another one like it in the country. Enrollment is unlimited, attendance is not obligatory, and it's free to all club members 18-years-old and under.

It's unique, too, because the courts are actually reserved for the kids between 10 and 12 in the morning and from 1 to 4 in the afternoon.

BETWEEN 12 AND 1 o'clock, the kids, however many happen to show up—usually between 20 and 30, what with dentist appointments, haircuts, etc.—are herded into their own private lunchroom. Then pandemonium breaks loose.

The room is a sizable one. Linoleum covered floor, pingpong table, and long luncheon table lined with folding chairs. It is devoid of all unnecessary furnishings. And it's a good thing.

Here's a place where a kid can do as he pleases. He won't be told to wipe his feet before he comes in, nobody will tell him to keep his feet off the chair, he can spill his milk and not get punished, he can eat his peas with his knife, and he can shout as loud as he wants.

He, or she, can do all that. It usually lasts for about 20 minutes, then Hank taps his glass for attention, the children take their seats with a minimum of confusion, complete silence is observed for 15 seconds during which time grace is said, each to himself, then they eat. They really eat.

AFTER A NICE WARM lunch the boys and girls calm down. They play checkers or slap-jack or old maid and wait for their next session on the tennis courts.

Hank has had children in his class who were nervous, timid and awkward. But inevitably they leave with plenty of poise and self-confidence.

Bachelor Hank takes pride, and justly so, in the way he can handle children. Tennis is only one department of his year-round program.

Soda Bonuses Prove Incentive

During the winter he instructs basketball, bowling, badminton and volley ball. He hopes to install ice skating and skiing this winter. Hank is an exceptionally versatile athlete.

His physical educational accomplishments do not come by chance, he was a physical training instructor in the Army.

Every two weeks comes a checkup and test for each pupil. He does not teach them to just play tennis. If they're uncoordinated he teaches them simple things, like running and throwing a ball. He never forces any of them.

Hank is not trying to develop any one club champ. Sure, he helps and encourages the ones that show exceptional ability, but he treats them all alike. And they all love him for it.

Army's Earl Blaik Will Give a Buck To See Hickman Wrestle Owen

New York, Aug. 6 (AP).—The application of Earl (Red) Blaik, Army's football coach, for tickets to the Eastern Collegiate All-Star vs. New York Giant football game on September 1 was received today.

Attached was this note:

"I'll pay a dollar extra if Herman Hickman (Yale football coach and also mentor of the Collegians) will wrestle Steve Owen (Giant coach) between halves but only two bits extra if Hickman wrestles Jack Lavelle (Notre Dame and Giant scout)."

Owen, Hickman and Lavelle are known as the three biggest men in football. They average approximately 280 pounds each.

Richards Wins 150th

Lewes, England, Aug. 6 (AP).—Gordon Richards, Britain's champion jockey, rode his 150th winner of 1949 today by steering home The Accused in the Ringmer 2-year-old plate.

Stewart Wins Swim

St. Ignace, Mich., Aug. 6 (AP).—Walter Stewart, 26, of San Diego, Calif., won the 4-mile Straits of Mackinac swim here today in the record-breaking time of 2 hours, 1 minute and 21 seconds.

Sgt. Rdgeley Shoots 285, Wins Air Force Golf

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 6 (AP).—Sergt Harold B. Ridgeley of Maxwell Field, Ala., won the Air Force golf championship here today with a 285 total for 72 holes.

Runnerup was Capt. Fred G. Moseley, Portsmouth, Va., representing the USAF European Command in Germany. He trailed one stroke behind the sergeant.

Ridgeley, whose home is Havertown, Pa., and Moseley were tied at 212 at the end of 54 holes yesterday. Ridgeley took a 73 today to Moseley's 74.

Joe Palmer Wins in Miles Regatta

St. Michaels, Md., Aug. 6 (AP).—Almost airborne at an average speed of more than 56 miles per hour, Joe Palmer's hydroplane Tommy Boy proved the fastest boat today on the broad Miles River.

Palmer, 39-year-old driver from Arlington, Va., won the 135-cubic-inch hydroplane event with a second and first in the two heats. His red-white-and-blue boat averaged 52.115 m.p.h. on the first 5-mile heat and 56.747 in winning the second race.

More than 100 motorized vessels competed in the 16 power events winding up the Miles River Yacht Club regatta.

Louis Novotny of Los Angeles won the Pacific one-design hydroplane event in his Cherub II, taking both heats with average speeds of 45 and 48 m.p.h., respectively.

Bill Tieman of Wyoming, Del., the national 1948 high point champion of his class, piloted Here's Me to second in both heats.

My Folly, piloted by Mrs. Sheila Boyd of St. Michaels, won the 48-cubic-inch runabout and hydroplanes race. The 27-year-old hometown girl beat eight men in both heats. Her husband, Edward, wound up third.

A St. Michaels boat, Magic, captured honors for picturesque Chesapeake Bay log canoes by sweeping to her third straight victory.

Sailed by Owner George H. (Bob) Wilson, Magic won the Governor's Cup handicap race on top of two victories yesterday.

Wilson's boat, built in 1894 out of five hollowed Maryland pine logs, is the oldest of the rakish two-masters in competition this year.

Wilson, 42, had a crew of nine, including his wife and four of their five children.

State Trooper John Fleming reported one casualty. Norman Breeding, 31, of Stevensville, an oiler on the ferryboat O'Connor, drowned while swimming with a party from a small cabin cruiser in the spectator fleet watching the hydroplane races.

The junior gold cup hydroplane Dee Jay IV barely made it to the finish line before sinking with a hole in her bottom but managed to win the 10-mile unlimited speedboat race.

Duke Adams of Solomons Island, Md., sailed Oliver's Gift to victory in the final log canoe event as faint breezes forced skippers to put on square-sails, staysails and other light weather canvas. The old timers' Sunday canoe race was later announced as called off.

Mrs. Patsy Bremer of Corsica River Yacht Club, Centreville, Md., swept to her third straight victory and the series title in the Star class, with tidewater fisheries commissioner W. Mason Shehan of Easton as her crew.

Midgets Return To Lanham

Owner Ed Mahoney last night announced that midget automobile racing will be resumed with a Friday night show at the West Lanham Speedway late this month.

In North Carolina, Suh, Anybody Can Catch Fish

It's so Easy Anglers Need Education To Stop Making Unnecessary Hauls

By Ralph Murdock

ANGLERS from everywhere have been proving during the 1949 fishing season along the North Carolina coast that great catches and large fish of many species can be taken by anybody. The species have included channel bass, cobia, dolphin, bluefish, Spanish mackerel and many smaller species. Most numerous catches have been dolphin. There have been numerous occasions this year when anglers, returning from the Gulf Stream have brought in more than 100 dolphin per boat.

Murdock

That from the true sportsman's point of view is just too many dolphin for any party to kill, in view of the fact that most of the fish in such a catch would never be utilized as food.

ROLAND MacCLAMROCK, is president of the North Carolina Wildlife Association. He is one person who plans to do something about educating anglers to release all fish they catch except those which can be used as food. Placards are being posted to urge anglers to conserve fish and release them while they are still alive.

U. L. Hodges, secretary of the Virginia Fisheries Association is consulting with representatives of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service on the lack of fish in the lower Chesapeake Bay prior to the conference of dealers and commercial men called for the latter part of this month. The fish scarcity has caused the fisheries group to act. Maryland and North Carolina groups will be welcomed at the main meeting since the existing situation affects both of those States.

SHOULD YOU be planning a vacation (and who isn't) and cannot make a choice between fresh water and salt water fishing here is a spot where you can enjoy both. Nag's Head, where the Wright brothers flew the first airplane, is the location. It affords not only the "tops" in salt water fishing but has some of the finest fresh water ponds an angler could desire. It is one of the few locations where you can choose your own type of fishing.

A non-resident licence for fresh water fishing is only $1.25 per day. Fishing guides charge $3 a person for a half day of angling and furnish the boat, motor and tackle. Daily limits of large mouth bass that run up to 6 pounds are taken from the ponds by anglers.

For salt water fishing most guides charge $30 for all-day trips regardless of whether you still fish or troll. There is no license required. Angling from public piers and bridges cost nothing and the same goes for surf fishing. Incidentally, those big red channel bass have just returned to the Oregon Inlet area. You can still take a fling at the bronze beauties if you failed to hook one last spring.

THE LARGEST recorded porgie which weighed 4¾ pounds and measured 20 inches in length was taken by William G. Rook from a charter boat at Wildwood, N. J.

Seldom do we give the fishing captains credit for catching fish. But here is a "must." Being without a fishing party, Capt. James R. Drury of Ridge, Md., decided to take his family out for fishing. Besides his wife Rose, he took his three grandchildren, Nettie, 8; Donald, 6 and Eddie, who is only 3 years old.

Going out from St. Jerome's Creek he headed for the Northwest Middles in search of big game fish. He was amply rewarded for his efforts by nabbing two large bonita, the largest of which tipped the beam at 6½ pounds and measured 58½ inches in length. The other bonita was not exactly a minnow. It scaled 51 pounds and was 53 inches long. The rare specimens for this area were taken with rod and reel with the use of small fish for bait.

FRED ORR, of Viers Mill Village, Silver Spring, Md., comes up with this one. While fishing primarily for catfish with shrimp, they kept losing their bait. Tackle was changed after they had hooked a blue gill. Orr and his friend ended up with 9 bream and blue gill. While cleaning the fish they noticed that their insides were filled with Japanese beetles. He suggests trying the beetles on crappie and rockfish. "At least," said Mr. Orr, "it would also help to eliminate the Jap bettle situation."

Nag's Head Has Both for Fishermen Weighing Saltwater or Freshwater

SINCE THE ADVENT of the hardhead into shallow water in the Chesapeake Bay all piers along the shore line have been crowded with anglers that range in age from 6 to 60. The 60-year-olders, who at no time could be persuaded to fish from a rowboat now have joined in the sport of catching hardhead from a safety zone. The 6-60 club represents both male and female anglers.

Miss Teresa Roth, of Baltimore, Md., who is vacationing at Franklin Manor, caught her first fish from the pier. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Furlong of Washington also enjoyed good luck with the croakers while pier fishing. With the help of Buddy Richardson and Buddy Duckett, the party hauled in 24 big hardheads in an evening's sport. The two "buddies" are 10 years of age each.

Pros Could Help

Emmet Keeps Junior Golf Interest High

By West McLean
Post Reporter

The recent National Junior championship which was held at Congressional Country Club brought into sharp focus the scope of the junior program in the District as compared to that in other States.

The District was awarded one of the largest number of qualifying places for the junior, not only because it was being held here but also on the size and ability of the District entry.

Frank Emmet, affable director of the junior golf in the District, has built up one of the strongest and best organized junior golf programs in the country. His 22 years at the helm of the District's junior golf have gained him recognition through the Nation as a friend and aide of the young golfers.

The only other section boasting a junior program in any way comparable to Washington's is Louisville, Ky. Other sections have larger turnouts or boast more success in the national tournaments but all fall far short of the over-all program as set up in the District.

Emmet is now seeking more help from the pros in this area in coaching some of the more promising of the local juniors and to date has met with little success in his efforts. It is on the junior golfers today that our golf program in the future depends and Emmet deserves the utmost cooperation from the pros and any aid possible from the amateur ranks.

Gil Also Gains Finals In Doubles

Kalamazoo, Mich., Aug. 6 (AP).—Gil Bogley of Chevy Chase, Md., today advanced toward his second straight singles title in the National junior tennis tournament.

His careful placements this afternoon toppled fourth-seeded Whitney Reed of Alameda, Calif., 6—4, 6—4, in a semifinal. Bogley was never behind in either of the two sets.

Tomorrow he takes on up-and-coming Hamilton Richardson, of Baton Rouge, La., the 15-year-old Richardson, in his first season of junior play, trimmed second-seeded Jerry DeWitts of Oakland, Calif., 1—6, 6—2, 6—3.

If Richardson should spring an upset in the finals by defeating Bogley, he might then stand a chance of taking three straight junior titles. He has two years of junior eligibility left. The trick was last turned by former star Vinnie Richards in 1919, 1920 and 1921.

In the semifinal boys' doubles unseeded Al Harum of Coral Gables, Fla., and Leslie Ruthven of Boca Raton, Fla., defeated third-seeded Don Kierbow of Venice, Calif., and Joe Blatchford of Beverly Hills, Calif., 11—9, 7—5.

The other boys' doubles match saw another unseeded team, Al Kuhn of Evanston, Ill., and Don Thompson, Jackson Heights, N. Y., defeat fourth-ranked Ralph Freund, Fresno, Calif., and John Lesch, San Francisco, Calif., 6—4, 6—3.

The two unseeded duos meet in the finals tomorrow.

Bogley Also Wins Doubles

The junior doubles semifinals this afternoon also saw two upsets. The third-seeded team of Bogley and Dick Squires, Bronxville, N. Y., defeated first-ranked Whitney Reed and Charles Hickox, Berkeley, Calif., 4—6, 6—0, 6—3.

Fifth-seeded Jerry DeWitts, Oakland, Calif., and Ernest du Bray, San Francisco, trimmed second-seeded Jacque Grigry, Alhambra, Calif., and Reynolds McCabe, La Mesa, Calif., 6—1, 0—6, 6—3. Bogley and Squires will meet DeWitts and Du Bray in the doubles finals Sunday.

He's Biding His Time

Robbie, Southeast's Leading Bowling Fan, Has to Content Himself With Keeping Score

JOHN ROBINSON

SOUTHEAST WASHINGTON'S greatest bowling fan and foremost authority on past performances has never rolled a bowling ball on a Washington alley.

He is John Robinson of 26 Ridge rd. se., who keeps score for all the big matches at Greenway Bowling Alley and often at other alleys around the city.

Robbie, as he is known around Greenway, lost both legs due to a rare ailment known as Berger's disease, and since has had to confine his interest in bowling to keeping score, a task he's performed at Greenway for the past five years.

The way Robbie explains it, his present activity is just a means of keeping pace until he can bowl again. His most recent amputation was in 1946, and his doctor says he can try bowling in two more years.

A husky six-footer, Robbie was a creditable 10-pin bowler in his native Summerville, N. J., before moving to Washington. He had a 170 average and still is anxious to try duckpins, something he had never seen until moving here.

"But you can't push it too quickly," he cautions. "I knew when Bert Shepard (World War II veteran who tried to make good with Washington) started pitching too soon after his amputation he'd have a tough time. I plan to wait the full time."

From his position behind the score board, Robbie has seen many of the outstanding games and matches rolled in the city and is a ready reference for settling wagers.

The highest game he ever saw—200—was rolled by Lindy Scott two years ago and Robbie recalls now that he marked in every box but the eighth.

Robbie is a statistician with the Federal Works Agency and believes that his daily contact with figures aids in his accurate scoring. Besides keeping his own sheet, he often makes mental tabulation of the games to his right and left.

"I often see one or two pins dropped he says, but don't generally say anything unless it means a game. One night last spring I noted a pin dropped in the second box and followed it all the way through.

"At the end I called it to the attention of the scorer and it moved the team involved into first place in the league."

Robbie thinks the most exciting game he scored is one involving Julie Singer, Greenway's manager. "Julie was rolling anchor man with Winchester, he recalls, and went into his last box with Winchester needing 17 pins to tie and 18 pins to break the world's team record.

"Julie came up with a spare, all right, but then cut a deuce on the mark when a seven would have tied the record."

Robbie called over his shoulder to get the correct date from Singer, who has held the high District average for the past two years, but Julie was backing away mumbling something about it not amounting to a row of duckpins.

Mr. America, Superman Featured on Mat Card

Mr. America and The Golden Superman, wrestling's glamour boys, will tackle two mat villains in a double main event at Joe Turner's Arena next Wednesday.

Mr. America is rematched with Bibber McCoy, who lost to Mr. America on a disqualification in their last meeting. Superman takes on Wally Dusek, of the Dusek Gang, in the other attraction.

Siamese Boxer Dies In Happy World Bout

Singapore, Aug. 6 (AP).—Nai Tom Chai, a Siamese boxer, died today after being carried from the ring unconscious at Happy World Stadium. Chai, 26, was stopped in the fourth round by Mok Kai Khoon. He attempted to rise after a nine-count, but collapsed. He was a featherweight.

Ratford Dawson Fight Here

Doug Radford, twice conqueror of Kid Gavilan, has agreed to fight Freddie Dawson, number one lightweight challenger, at Griffith Stadium, August 15, Matchmaker Gabe Menendez announced yesterday.

After talking to Sammy Aaronson, Ratford's manager, by phone Menendez mailed contracts to New York and expects their return Monday. Ratford was singled out over Paddy DeMarco and Sugar Costner for what is one of the outstanding lightweight matches of the year.

It will be the third meeting between Dawson and Ratford and could be the best lightweight fight of the year. The two fighters met twice in 1948, Dawson winning the first 10-round bout in Chicago, and Ratford reversing the count in Philadelphia three months later.

Ratford's smart performance against Sonny Boy West in Turner's Arena last March bore heavily on his selection for the shot at Dawson. The New Yorker handily won a unanimous 10-round decision.

Both of Ratford's victories over Gavilan were in New York in 1947-8. After Ratford won the first 10-round bout, Gavilan challenged him again and Ratford repeated the performance. He also holds a verdict over Gene West.

Dawson, the outstanding lightweight challenger, is regarded as uncrowned king of that division in his native Chicago. He also is ranked among the top three welterweights, mainly off his knockout of Bernie Ducosen, something Champion Sugar Robinson was unable to do.

Mailander Girls Play Twin Bill

Blue Blazes, Watch Me Win Pony Show Tri-Colors

By Harry De Mawby, Jr.

Purcellville, Va., August 6.—Blue Blazes owned by the Misses Page and Berkley Jennings topped a large field of ponies under 13 hands to win the small pony championship at the Purcellville Pony Show held here today.

In competition with an outstanding number of quality ponies, Mr. and Mrs. W. Haggin Perry's Watch Me took the measure of the large ponies and earned the tricolor in that division.

Blue Blazes was ridden by Lou Weston Elam to victory in the pony hunters and corinthian, placing in the warm-up, hunter hack, and ponies under saddle, and fourths in the model and open jumping for the day's highest score of 17½ points.

Watch Me, well ridden by Ann Everett Yoe, scored a win in the pony hunters, seconds in the hunter hack, model ponies under saddle, and corinthian, a third in the open jumping, and a fourth in the warm-up event to tally 15½ points for the championship award

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Stocks Reflect New Confidence

"If stocks sink into new low ground, people will become more uncertain and cautious. They'll think and perhaps act in terms of the 1920-21 depression. But if the market rallies, then people will think anew: Well, this is just a minor postwar readjustment after all. And they'll act accordingly."

Livingston

After I wrote that at the beginning of June, stock prices declined to new postwar lows. But they promptly got up from the floor. From 161.6 on June 13, the Dow-Jones industrial average rose to 177, or 10 per cent.

Sentiment among Government officials, businessmen, union leaders and investors perked up simultaneously. For example, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said in Boston that the rise in unemployment to four million was to be expected, that no depression such as we have had in the past was likely.

Steel Scrap Prices Rise

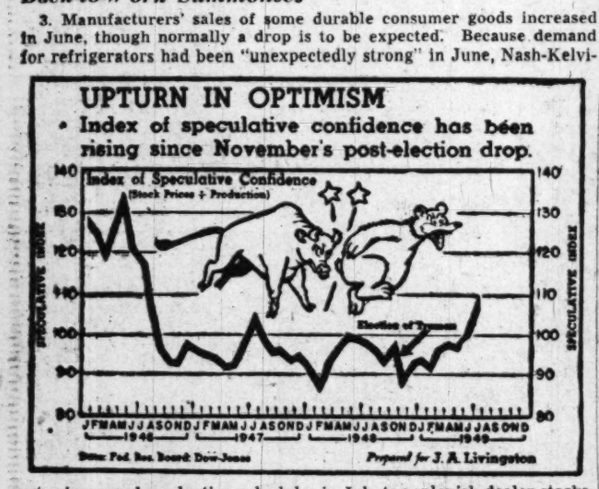
Whether the rise in the stock market is a cause or a result of the improvement in sentiment is hard to say. For business perked up too. The steel companies, after famishing for orders during June and most of July, are receiving inquiries again. Steel scrap has risen $1 to $3 a ton, a sign that the industry has eaten into its stockpile. There are other signs of a turn in affairs:

1. Newspaper advertising in June was up 9 per cent over a year ago. Retailers are pushing harder to get business, which suggests (a) that they're willing to spend money to go after sales and (b) that they feel the consumer has money to spend—if only you plug the right item at the right time.

2. Business loans increased 16 million dollars in the week ended July 27, thus ending a 27-week decline. The reversal suggests that businessmen have at least temporarily completed deinventorying and are now building up stocks for fall. The change in trend had been foreshadowed the week before (as noted in this column) when six Federal Reserve districts reported advances in loans.

Back-to-Work Summonses

3. Manufacturers' sales of some durable consumer goods increased in June, though normally a drop is to be expected. Because demand for refrigerators had been "unexpectedly strong" in June, Nash-Kelvinator increased production schedules in July to replenish dealer stocks.



4. Numerous companies have recalled workers. Industrial Rayon resumed full production at its Covington, Va., plant. The Frigidaire division of General Motors rehired at Dayton, because of "sustained demand." The Tappan Stove Co. at Mansfield, Ohio, added to its force to step up output 10 per cent. These additions to work rosters were too late to show up in the July employment (or unemployment) total.

5. Engineering News-Record's compilation of awards for heavy construction, at 239 million dollars for the week ended August 4, was the highest this year. In New York, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey announced plans to accelerate the State's 500-million-dollar public works program to cushion the effects of unemployment. Here is a development of major importance—an alertness on the part of State government to responsibility during a business decline. Such moves are bound to prevent a major spiral downward.

Sign of Confidence

The rally in stock prices occurred at the very moment that industrial production was sliding to a postwar low. The Federal Reserve Board index of industrial production registered 169 in June and is likely to reach 162 for July.

Since Wall Street is by reputation a cold and calculating place, that can signify only one thing: Investors and speculators are willing to buy a low level of production now because they expect a higher level later on. In short, their speculative confidence in the future has improved (see chart).

Assuming no economic disaster akin to 1920-21 or 1929-33, stocks are interesting on the basis of dividends alone. Good yields are conceivable at current prices even if dividends are cut. Note in the following table that General Motors and Kennecott afford returns of 8.9 per cent, U. S. Steel, 8.7 per cent, but Standard Oil (New Jersey), one of the bluest of the blue chips, affords only 3.8 per cent.

Stocks are being increasingly sought by universities and foundations for the return offered. As a group, common shares return 6.9 per cent as against 3.9 per cent for preferred stocks, 2.6 per cent for high-grade corporate bonds, and 2.2 per cent for long-term United States obligations. Even the 12 low-yielding, super-duper blue-chip shares in Standard & Poor's compilation offer 4.9 per cent.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Aug. 6 (AP).—A mild run-up in the last few minutes left grain contracts mostly higher on the Board of Trade today. Dealings were slow all session and even the late advance did not produce any large increase in volume.

The run-up started in soybeans and then spread to other pits. A notable laggard was oats, which could do little in the face of a slack demand for the cash grain. Wheat ended lower to ⅛ higher; corn was ⅛ to 1¼ higher; oats were ⅛ lower to ¼ higher; rye was ¾ to 1¼ higher, soybeans were 1 to 1¾ higher, and lard was 5 cents lower to 7 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Some of the support wheat obtained again was based on trade reaction to the new farm proposal, made public late Thursday by a Senate Agricultural Subcommittee. It was generally understood this measure had a good chance of passage in view of its support by Senator Anderson (D., N. Mex.).

It became known during the session that an embargo on wheat for storage to terminals in the Southwestern States had been partially lifted. The embargo, originally issued June 13, still applied to the terminals of Kansas City, Kans.; Kansas City, Mo.; St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill.

Where the Sun Shines Bright and the Breezes Come Up the Bay—That's Gibson Island

Harris & Ewing Photos.

A DAY at Gibson Island begins here at the old stone gatehouse where visitors check in with the gatekeeper. Driving up in the brand new "Robin's Egg" are Alice Watson, Teeny Morley (in the back seat) and Janeth Lloyd and Joan Nicholl (up front) whose parents maintain summer houses on the island. Gatekeeper Philip Kurth nods them by. He's been working at the Island for 23 years and knows just about everybody

By Norma Lanum

FROM BROADWATER WAY to Ha' Penny Road, from Wampum Path Thoroughfare to Ayrlie Water Road, at Gibson Island summer's a pleasure.

And why not? While neighboring Baltimore and Washington melt under a tropical sun, the luckier residents of both cities enjoy a Shangri-la plus all the summer sports you can name on this exclusive Chesapeake Bay isle.

Just about 150 families from this area's society echelon maintain summer houses on the privately owned 1000-acre isle. A few stay there all year around, the breadwinners commuting to Baltimore or Washington.

But a greater number are part time, off-again-on-again residents of Gibson. They start visiting the resort island for weekends about the time of the last frost; during midsummer they're there for approximately two or three months; and then they limit their visits to weekends again until it's too cool for comfort.

Houses Show Individuality

WHEN THE office schedule gets tough and Dad has to spend weekdays in town he usually is able to get away each weekend through the summer months.

The Gibson Island summer houses are as individualistic as permanent suburban homes. And the typical house, whether it be of ultra modern, Dutch colonial, California rambler, Victorian, or early American design, lacks nothing in the way of comfort.

Widely spaced throughout the island's forest, the houses usually are surrounded by spacious lawns suited to a "T" for croquet, badminton and garden parties and three or four-car garages.

The average Gibson Islander takes a car or two, or maybe three, to his summer home with him and keeps one or two boats at the yacht club. (Usually a dinghy for the youngsters and a yawl or sloop for racing and family excursions on the bay.)

Throughout the summer the Yacht Club sponsors competition for several classes among the children and also races 'way down the Chesapeake for owners of the large yachts.

In addition to salt water fishing in the bay, Gibson islanders may drop their hooks and sinkers in the fresh water of the isle's surprisingly large lake. The lake, in fact, is referred to as the "largest fresh water lake in the State of Maryland."

The Gibson Island Country Club has a nine-hole golf course that's not too tough to distract the Sunday sportsman and yet sharpened up with another lake smack in front of one of the greens. For tennis the island offers four fast courts bordered with tall shade trees that keep them fairly cool even in mid-day.

De Luxe Country Club

A BEACH trims nearly half of the island with the best swimming up at the point. There's a spacious pavilion there, too, with a snack bar and space for church carnivals and other community affairs.

And the Country Club boasts everything our metropolitan clubs have and much more. The clubhouse fronts the bay. While eating dinner in the circular dining room members can watch huge schooners, war vessels and barges inch their way along the horizon. And the club has dances every Thursday and Saturday nights.

Thinking of driving over to Gibson next weekend for a look-see? Better give it a second thought. A gateman guards the only entrance to the island. Unless you have a house there or can prove you're visiting somebody who does, you're out of luck.

TRIMMING the dinghy for a short sail are Janeth Lloyd and Joan Nicholl. Most of the Gibson Island families have at least one boat whether it be a dinghy for the young crowd or a 64-foot yawl or sloop, cabin cruiser or speedy power job

Tropical Embassies Enliven Summer

By Elizabeth Maguire

AN ACUTE social recession brought about by the record heat has been somewhat broken. Citizens confining their activities to turning on a fan or slipping into a pool are about to embark on a round of entertainment. Invitations have been sent out by representatives of several countries bordering the equator, and Washington has a gala time ahead.

First and foremost on the calendar are parties occasioned by the visit of Elpidio Quirino, President of the Philippines. Luncheons, dinners and receptions will be given in his honor, starting with a dinner Monday at Blair House and ending with a reception Wednesday at the Philippine Embassy. After his short visit here, President Quirino will go to New York for several days.

India and Pakistan are celebrating their National Days on Monday, August 15. The Ambassador and Mme. Ispahani will receive at the Pakistan Embassy from 6 to 8 o'clock, and Mme Pandit, Ambassador of India, will welcome hundreds of guests at the Indian Embassy at 9:30 p. m.

Mrs. Dulles Is Husband's Right Hand

By Genevieve Reynolds

ALL the world is her interest. And when it comes to a grasp of international affairs, quiet, elegant Mrs. John Foster Dulles has few if any peers among her sex.

For 37 years—the duration of her married life—the handsome, attractive-looking wife of the new New York Senator has lived in an atmosphere of global thinking and events. Dulles, appointed by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Robert F. Wagner, is an international relations expert. In addition to serving on the United States delegation to the United Nations, he has had a say in practically every international gathering since he was secretary to a delegation in 1907 at The Hague Peace Conference.

Often accompanying her husband on foreign missions, affable, brown-eyed Mrs. Dulles played an important off-stage wifely role. As sometimes unofficial adviser and always hostess par excellence, she made friends with the wives of the world's leaders.

Aided U. N. Wives

IN NEW YORK CITY or at Lake Success, she could be counted upon to make the spouses of the U. N. delegates feel at home. She'd give them hints on proper American tipping when asked or take them shopping. Above all, she saw to it that the wives met native New Yorkers and other Americans.

Mrs. Dulles likes people and parties. Neverthless, she finds plenty of fun at home wherever she is. "I never know whom my husband will bring to breakfast, luncheon or dinner," she says. "It's sure to be someone interesting. Hence life is always stimulating and eventful."

When Senator and Mrs. Dulles want a complete rest, they go to their island home in Lake Ontario.

MRS. JOHN F. DULLES
. . . unofficial adviser

There they have no telephones, radios or newspapers. There, 25 miles from the nearest land, the two temporarily banish world problems.

Mrs. Dulles as well as her famous husband likes to fish. On camping trips, she frequently cooks the haul that both catch. Her favorite recipe for preparing fish is to dip them in an egg-meal batter and fry them in salt pork fat.

Hand Before the Mast

HER other hobby is sailing of which she has done a great deal. As for clothes, she prefers soft feminine lines to severe tailored ones.

Ever active, Mrs. Dulles has had an unusually busy life since becoming a Senatorial wife. She spends three days here at her Wardman Park Hotel apartment. On weekends, she and the Senator fly to their summer home at Cold Harbor Spring, Long Island, which is a weekend mecca for their numerous friends of all nationalities. This weekend the Dulles will see their latest grandchild, Ellen, less than 3 months old. She'll come with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Watson Foster Dulles from their home in Mexico.

Mrs. Dulles recalls that when she saw the two older grandchildren last they spoke more Spanish than English. She says that her reading knowledge of Spanish is much more advanced than her speaking ability. Nonetheless, she has no difficulty conversing with her grandchildren.

Prior to coming to the Nation's Capital, Mrs. Dulles resigned her memberships on the boards of the National Republican Women's Club, the National Society of Colonial Dames and the Bellevue Hospital Nurses Training School.

Strenuous War Duties

DURING World War II, she put in long, strenuous hours at Bellevue, manning the volunteer nurses' office and other volunteer centers, including telephone operators. But what with entertaining U. N. delegates and their wives, attending Paris conferences and filling the role as international hostess, Mrs. Dulles found insufficient time to devote to organizations as in previous years. For she refuses to be deadwood on any board or in any club. Either she works conscientiously or retires in favor of some one who can devote more time to the project.

After attending school in Paris for two years, Mrs. Dulles and her chaperon toured the continent for a year. She reads, speaks and writes French well.

Senator and Mrs. Dulles flew to China and Japan on the "Old China Clipper" in the late '30s. Since then both have traveled countless miles in Europe and other parts of the world.

Annapolis Activities

Louise Manseau to Wed Ensign Duncan Packer

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 6.—Of widespread interest in Navy circles is the recently announced engagement of Miss Louise Madeline Manseau, daughter of Capt. Bernard E. Manseau, USN, and Mrs. Manseau, to Ensign Duncan Packer, USN, son of Capt. F. A. Packer, USN (ret.) and Mrs. Packer of Washington.

Plans have been made for an early September wedding at the San Francisco Naval Shipyard, where the bride-elect's father is now on duty.

Ensign Packer graduated from the Capitol Page High School, Washington, and from the Naval Academy with the class of 1947.

Dr. and Mrs. John N. Wilson of Sylvan Shores, near Annapolis, this week announced the engagement of their daughter, Joan E. Wilson, to John T. Sears of 1005 Jackson st., Eastport, son of William Sears and the late Mrs. Sears.

Miss Wilson is a recent graduate of St. Mary's High School and is now attending the Annapolis Business College. Mr. Sears was graduated from the Annapolis High School in 1943 and served 19 months in the Marine Corps during World War II.

No date has been set for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Trott of Eastport announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Jeanne Trott, to Joseph Small, son of William Small of Annapolis and the late Mrs. Small. No date has been set for the wedding.

Miss Sibyl Vincent Godfrey, daughter of Capt. Vincent H. Godfrey, USN (ret.) and Mrs. Godfrey of Pittsburgh, Pa., has chosen September 2 as the date of her marriage to Ensign Robert Keith Geiger, USN. The ceremony will be performed in the Naval Academy Chapel and will be followed by a reception at the Officers' Club.

The bride-elect is a granddaughter of Mrs. Arthur Burneston Owens of Southgate ave., Annapolis.

Mrs. Edward Garland Rawlings of Annapolis announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Evelyn Mae Fowler, to Midshipman Leo J. Innerbichler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Innerbichler of Magdalena, N. Mex. The wedding will take place next June, following Midshipman Innerbichler's graduation from the Naval Academy.

MIDSHIPMEN of the class of 1950, who recently returned from the first cruise to Europe, are taking part in submarine indoctrination cruises in the Chesapeake Bay. The training period, which ends August 10, is divided into four three-day training periods. Approximately 88 midshipmen are embarked in the four submarines during each period. The submarines being used are the Runner, Conger, Diablo and Torsk.

Among the members of the new "plebe" or fourth class at the Naval Academy is Kenneth E. Hutchinson, son of Commodore Myron W. Hutchinson, USN (ret.), and Mrs. Hutchinson, of 6 Acton pl., Annapolis. The Hutchinsons have made their home here for many years and have numerous friends in Annapolis society.

By Nina Carter Tabb

MR. AND MRS. HENRY P. CONKEY of Chicago, Ill., and Middleburg announce the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy Sherwood Conkey, to Mr. Wallace J. Ross, jr., of St. Louis, Mo.

Miss Conkey is a graduate of the Faulkner School and of Ogantz Junior College. Mr. Ross attended Colgate University, N. Y., and is a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. He volunteered for service in the Army prior to Pearl Harbor and was for 3½ years in China, Burma and India, coming out as a captain.

No date has been set for the wedding, but it will be this fall at the Trinity Episcopal Church in Upperville, Va. Mr. and Mrs. Conkey came to Virginia about three years ago and they and their daughters are most popular here.

The party that Mr. and Mrs. Hunter de Buts gave at their home, Nordley, near Upperville, on Saturday afternoon in honor of General and Mrs. Fellows, who have recently come to their home, the Trap, near Upperville, was a very delightful occasion.

Now that General Fellows is retired from the Marine Corps they expect to spend all of their time here. General and Mrs. Fellows have been visitors at Oakley for years as they are great friends of the late Mr. Dulany and of Mrs. H. Rozier Dulany for a long time.

Drinks were served on the back veranda at Nordley.

Among those there who passed refreshments to the visitors was Miss Grayson Beach of Washington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Beach, who was spending the weekend with the de Butts.

Eugene Barnes of Washington spent the past week end in Middleburg as the house guest of Mrs. Helen Leache. Miss Willett Leache of Washington was also here for the weekend and she and Mrs. Leache gave a cocktail party on Sunday afternoon in honor of Mr. Barnes. The Leache home looked lovely with many flowers in bloom and everyone had a delightful time.

Mrs. Thomas U. Dudley has returned to her home, Exning, near Middleburg, from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Jack Newell, at Brookline, Mass., and from a visit to Atlantic City, N. J.

She has recovered from the attack of pneumonia that she had while away from home and is looking much better. Mrs. Dudley is very busy getting ready for the wedding of her granddaughter, Miss Jane Fairfax Dudley, to William Elison, which will take place in September.

Mr. and Mrs. Malbon R. Wood of Baltimore are having their young daughter, Laura Bentley Wood, christened today.

Welby Carter Wood and his brother, William M. Wood, left on Monday for a motor trip to Nantucket for several weeks. They stopped off at Northbridge, Mass., for this weekend and visited their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Whitin, and went yesterday to the wedding of Mr. Thomas McLinton Whitin and Miss Edith Osborn Sherer, which took place at Red Top Farm, Little Compton, R. I., at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Last Tuesday, when "Love or Money" was shown at the Community Center, in Middleburg, there was a large crowd of people and every seat was taken. Among those who came up from Washington to see the play were Mrs. H. D. Flood and her son, Bolling Byrd Flood, who were greeted by their many friends here.

The firemen's carnival in Middleburg opened on Monday evening in the schoolhouse grounds and lasted until last night. There have been large crowds there every evenings and many interesting things to see.

She was with the Foreign Service from 1944 to 1946 with the Council of Foreign Ministers in London; the Deputies for Austria in 1948, and has recently returned from Paris where she was on the staff of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Miss Critzer attended the University of Havana, Cuba.

HERE'S a high, wide and handsome hat for the women who scorn "those little beanies." Sally Victor designed it and named it "Luna" because its sweeping brim is faced with bronze hatter's plush, a sleek, shimmering fabric which reflects pinpoints of light. Crown is of black felt, matching the soft veil with an edging of the plush circling the neck

"HIGHTIME" is an example of one of the "tall tales" that Manhattan Hatter John Frederics is telling for fall. The crown, standing high as can be in this picture, may be worn crushed to one side, or folded down to fit the head more snugly. Framing the face becomingly is the soft curled-under brim. It's made of black velour and green velvet

If Pale Cheeks Grow Stylish Again, He's In

NEW YORK (U.P.).—Maurice Levy, a jovial Frenchman with an eye for American beauties, wouldn't be surprised to see chalk balls back on feminine dressing tables.

"Everything comes back into style," he said philosophically, picking up a box of dead white face powder in his cosmetic showroom.

Oddly enough, that white face powder and several other products of 50 years ago still sell in this country. Levy imports the old-fashioned powder, rouge and face cream from France and does a comfortable business with it.

Beauty spots are another stock item with him.

"Beauty spots come and go," he explained, "and right now they're selling pretty slowly." A year ago, for some reason which the 75-year-old French importer can't explain and refuses to worry about, there was a sudden rush for the little black spots.

"They were very successful around 1920, too," he said, "but there are long gaps when women don't seem to think about them."

Just to prove that there are plenty of odd items for cosmetic use that the average woman never dreams of, Levy mentioned another of his specialties.

"I'm the only cosmetic man in New York who has rabbit paws," he said casually. "I import around a thousand dozen a year from Madame Bertrand in Paris."

Rabbit paws, it seems, are used to put on dry rouge. The tips are dipped in the rouge and dusted on the cheeks.

Madame Bertrand makes her living buying the paws from Paris butchers, and Levy said her mother did the same before her.

Designers' Rollcall Shows Conservatism in Hats

By Peggy Preston

WHILE PARIS is dreaming and scheming of hats with 18-inch spears on top, New York is playing it the conservative way. Something to suit everyone's taste is the way they figure it on this side of the Atlantic.

Here's how they see the shape of things in the high-fashion hat salons of Manhattan:

Hattie Carnegie: Small, petite hats, shaped close to the head and trimmed with braid, beads or fringe. Favorite combinations are velvet with jewels.

Laddie Northridge: Little "fez-type" hats that reach upward—but not too much. He likes them in fur felt, studded with jet beads.

John Frederics: This designer, formerly the Frederic part of John-Frederics, is doing the tallest hats in town. He advises us to all become "high-hatted."

Sally Victor: Likes every type of hat, but does interesting tricks with turbans and puts "Canasta" trimming on some of her cutest bonnets.

Peg Fischer: Makes casual, becoming hats with medium-high crowns. In fabrics she leans toward plush velvet and fur felt.

Florence Reichman: Her favorite tricorne silhouette is more popular than ever this year. She does pretty ones in black velvet with springing white feathers.

Walter Florell: Feathers and lots of them capture the interest of this designer. For fall he uses all types and kinds, places them at surprising angles on crowns and brims.

Sales of 'Dazzlers' Brisker When Purse Strings Tighten

The investment value of a jewel is becoming as important as its decorative beauty, according to John Rubel, well-known jewelry designer.

"Curiously enough, the demand for large, first quality diamonds, rubies and sapphires increases instead of decreasing when people begin to watch their expenditures," Mr. Rubel said. "The intrinsic value of the large stone in itself becomes the first consideration, just as the sound value of a bond is considered.

Most fabulous example of the "important" look in jewels is a Rubel necklace of matched graduated round diamonds, the center one the size of a nickel (and worth thousands and thousands of same) and tapering off to about fingernail size at the clasp. The 35 stones in the necklace total 150 carats and the value is $175,000. John Rubel's famous "mystery setting" holds the stones tight.

Your Perfume Should Suit Personality

Perfume and personality go hand-in-hand like bacon and eggs and it's surprising but true that a good many American women don't know how to select the perfume that best suits them.

This is the opinion expressed by an authority on perfume, Philip C. Smith, president of Yardley's, in a signed article in the August issue of the American Magazine.

A woman's perfume is as much a part of her as her hat, her voice, her gestures, or her reactions, says Smith.

"Many women," he writes, "use the right perfume for their personality, but apply it so heavily they seem saturated by it. This is even more objectionable than using the wrong perfume.

"Much wiser is the woman who uses her perfume in modest quantities, but carries a small bottle in her purse and refreshes her perfume during the course of the evening."

In giving some helpful hints on the proper selection of perfume, Smith singles out a few distinctive feminine types who are preparing for a real, large evening affair. Under such circumstances, he says, the perfume for the sweet young teen-ager is definitely one of the light florals, such as rose, lavender, violet, lily of the valley.

TOBÉ SAYS—
Full Skirt Still Wins

It doesn't matter whether you like slim or full skirts this fall—you'll be fashion right on either score.

Certainly slim skirts look the newest and are the most extreme. In fact, some are so tight that one can only hobble! Most suit skirts are slim and straight but comfortable. The new slim skirted dresses are usually very tight but are often half-covered by flying panels or over-skirts, or aprons.

However, the full skirted dress—always with smooth hips—is still the most prevalent silhouette—and has finally become the big popular fashion of America.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl, 16, Argues Against Mother's Theory That One Shouldn't Kiss a Man Unless One Is Engaged to Him; Calls It Laughable Idea

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My mother says a girl shouldn't kiss a boy until she gets engaged to him; and that to me sounds rather silly in 1949. It may have been true 40 years ago; but gosh, times change. If only mothers would realize that. I try to reason with mine, but she still sticks to her theory.

I am sure that almost any teen-ager reading this would truthfully say that they don't know any girl, dating young men, who hasn't been kissed by a boy. Of course I don't think it is entirely proper to kiss a boy on a first date; but I do think it is permissible on a third or fourth date to kiss your escort goodnight.

Comic Rehearsal of Home Teaching

I AM 16 and have been dating for a year. I am going steady now and my parents think a lot of the boy. What do you suppose he would say if I flatly refused to kiss him goodnight? Probably "Why not?" And if I should reply, "Mama says it's not proper to kiss a boy until you are engaged to him," he probably would die laughing . . . "Well, so I have to get engaged to you to deserve a goodnight kiss!"

Now isn't all this rather stupid? It really has me puzzled and I am sure other ten-agers wonder about it, too. After all, we '49ers don't take kissing seriously at our age. It is merely an exchange for a wonderful evening. Please give me your advice so I can rest assured. P. S.: What do you think of the series "Profile of Youth" in the Ladies Home Journal? V. P.

Youth Takes Crack at 'Profile' Report

DEAR V. P.: As it happens, I've read the "Profile" articles to date, at the suggestion of certain young ladies, high school and college age, who (like you) wanted to get my slant on the contents.

Then we had an exchange of views, and I was struck by a popular 18-year-old's shrewd comment that the articles "didn't add up,"—in the sense, she said, that they tamely, neutrally give a picture of a rather futile or at times precarious state of intimacy in boy-girl relations nowadays, alleged to be prevalent all over; and yet there is nothing on or between the lines that says "yes" or "no" to that sort of thing.

For her part, she remarked, she tries to figure things out as she goes along, for it's her family's policy to keep an open mind, use your head and don't let others' attitudes push you around; therefore she acts with escorts the way that makes her feel best, not with reference to how other girls do, or how many privileges her dates may rate elsewhere.

Better Act Human Than Like Monkeys

QUESTIONS from younger girls kept her talking, for they asked pointedly, "How does your system work? How do the boys react?" She said she was not on the witness stand, but she would say this, on the basis of her experience, that you don't have to kiss or let yourself be kissed, to hold a boy's interest if you get a bang out of life and just naturally create an atmosphere of fun on dates.

Speaking of reaction, she recalled an incident of dating a campus Lothario who seemed to expect kissing right off and when she didn't respond he chirped jauntily, "A coldie?" She said, "Nope." He said, "Your mother tell you not to?" She explained laughing, "Nope; my mother leaves these things to me; strictly my own decision." Whereupon he said happily, "Atta girl! Just wanted to make sure; we'll get along." And they had a wonderful evening and are still great friends.

So, to meet your questions, I submit this girl's philosophy. It seems rational, human, as distinguished from monkey imitativeness of mass example—which after all is the best that can be said of the new teen-ager idea of "kissing of course" after approximately four dates. I am pretty sure that the girl I've quoted would "die laughing" in a date's face if he indicated she ought to pay her way with kisses, any time. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

All work clothes should be starched, with the exception of heavy denims. Starch gives a glossy finish that helps to shed dust and makes them stay fresh longer.

Slip covers should be starched. Chintz that has lost its glaze may be given a glossy finish also by starching.

Starch gives cotton and linen fabrics a high gloss. This includes pillowcases, sheets, table linens, etc. Starching makes them more attractive and restores their original finish.

Determined to have a holiday he held to his course until he reached his destination—a hospital in Maine. Now that vacation is over, he's fit as a fiddle for a lot of hard work.

Interchangeable Fabrics Advised

If you're planning a fall wardrobe which has to do double duty for school and work, choose fabrics like wool jersey, flannel and corduroy. These fabrics are natural allies, and you can combine skirts of one material with jackets of another. With a switch of shoes, a small felt cap and some good gold jewelry, they can go from the classroom to the office.

Good Lettuce Dressing

To prepare an especially good dressing for lettuce add a little crushed garlic and crumbled blue cheese to the oil and vinegar and seasonings.

Loving Hand Care Vital

BECAUSE your hands are constantly exposed to the weather, to dusty chores, or to water, their skin is steadily robbed of its natural oil. This must be replaced in order for the skin to maintain its smooth texture.

Massage your hands with cream or lotion before and after laundering, gardening and dusting. Wear loose gloves while you sleep, and let your hands absorb a supply of rich cream at night.

Use nail cream or cuticle oil on hangnails. When you remove harsh cuticle, approach the sensitive matrix—the moon—with caution, for it is here that nail injuries occur most easily.

Use only the shades of polish that you know will be complexion flattering. Rosy reds and deep pinks emphasize the clarity of the skin; burnished red-browns enrich a tan. Use the more delicate pinks on nails which are exceptionally tiny. Be wary of the red-black shades. Outline moons and tips to make hands appear their most feminine. For an illusion of length, use polish over the entire nail.

For greater suppleness, your hands need exercise. Try shaking your hands vigorously from the wrists until they tingle, to improve circulation. Play an imaginary concerto to relax typewriter-weary fingers. Cup all ten fingers over a table surface, then raise each one individually as high as it will go.

If your nails seem fragile, or if they tend to split or chip, don't despair. Instead, look to your diet. Check to see if you are eating enough of the calcium foods like milk, fish or cheese. If your nails are bluish in color, improve their circulation with massage.

Before you undertake household tasks, pull your nails across a cake of soap or don household gloves. Spare nails unnecessary strain by using the cushions of your fingers for anything risky.

Remember how expressive your hands can be, but keep their gestures easy and graceful. Avoid affectation (the baby finger held above a teacup), fluttery motions (twisting a lock of hair, toying with jewelry), nervous mannerisms (table drumming, knuckle cracking, nail nibbling).

Learn to keep your hands quietly in repose when there is nothing for them to do. Keep them relaxed and half-curled, never clenched into tight white fists.

Wedding Guest List

The wedding guest list is a joint affair, to be worked on both by the bride-to-be and her fiance. The list is a four-way one, really: (1) The bride's list; (2) the bridegroom's list; (3) the bride's parents' list; (4) the bridegroom's family list. It is customary to ask both friends and acquaintances to the big church wedding, but only the best friends to the reception afterward.

Try Crumb Dressing

Those bread crumbs made from leftover bread can dress up many a vegetable dish, says the Woman's Home Companion. Browned in bacon drippings, a dash of vinegar added, they're superb on cooked green beans and asparagus.

IT'S NEW . . .

By Lucia Brown

THE TRANQUILLITY of beautiful pine trees, blue waters, and towering mountains can be yours at a glance if you have a wall covered with one of the new photographic murals a local store is featuring.

Photo murals usually come pretty high, but the price on these has been whittled down until it compares surprisingly well with other wall treatments. Made in California, the murals come only in black-and-white and sepia. They can be installed by a paper hanger—or by yourself, if you've had any experience in the wall-papering line.

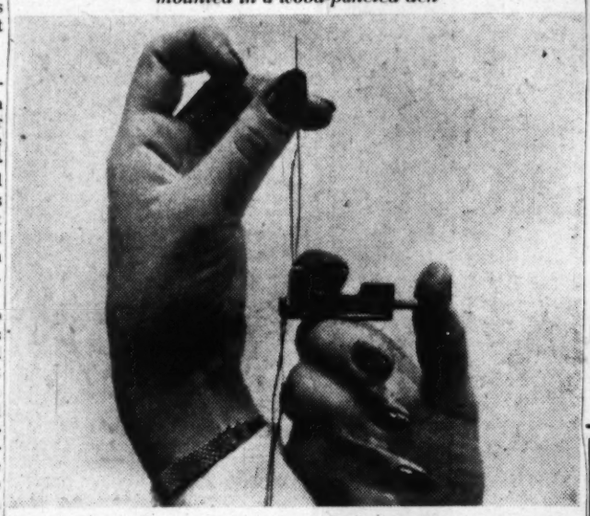
IF ANTIQUES are your avocation—or if you just like handsome furnishings—the copies of an 1812 counterpane just received by a Washington department store will interest you. The original was found in a log-cabin near historic Mecklenberg, N. C., and is considered a classic example of early American hand-looming. The copies, made by a large bedspread manufacturer, aren't hand-loomed, to be sure. The beauty and authenticity of their design, however, makes them fitting companions for Colonial furniture. The spreads come in two sizes, are completely preshrunk and reversible.

HOW would you like a lifetime guarantee that you need never again struggle with the task of threading a needle? It can be had for a small consideration if you purchase a new gadget now available here. It's the simplest needle - threader we've come across, no larger than a lipstick and easy as pie to operate. You poke in the needle, press a plunger at one end, place the thread across it, release the plunger, presto, there's your threaded needle, without benefit of strained eyesight.

SOMETHING new in tiny garments is the "Boater." It's a seemingly miraculous diaper cover made of nylon and it's said to be "waterproof, leak-proof, and seep-proof." Made with a curved-wall construction, it wraps and snaps about the infant and his didy but leaves leg openings free, airy, and comfortable. The waist band can be adjusted to meet baby's girth.

HERE'S a new grease-chaser to make your life easier. It's a liquid concentrate which will float grit, grime, and grease right down the sink drain. Only a small amount of the liquid need be added to hot water for cleaning any greasy surface and the action is instantaneous, with the grease turning into a crude soap and washing away. Stubborn broiler trays and oven interiors will shine like new after a treatment with this liquid, water, and steel wool.

HERE'S one of the new photographic murals showing Reflection Lake in Mount Lassen National Park. It's mounted in a wood-paneled den



EVEN with poor eyesight and trembling hands, you can thread a needle easily if you have one of these engaging new gadgets

Helpful Hints for Homemakers

Zinnias, marigolds, asters and such hardier flowers frequently give the water in the vase an unpleasant odor. By dropping a small piece of charcoal into the vase, the flowers will stay fresh longer and this odor will be greatly reduced.

To prevent film forming on cornstarch pudding, cover the serving bowl with waxed paper while the pudding is still hot. Secure it with a string or rubber band and when cool, set in the ice box to chill.

When pressing woolen clothes at home, wet the pressing cloth with hot water instead of cold and you will not cool the iron so much.

If through economy you are using drippings or margarine in a cake instead of butter, you can obtain a better flavor if you will squeeze the juice of a lemon over the fat and then beat them into a cream. It will also make the cake lighter in texture.

Next time you make homemade yeast rolls, sprinkle them with poppyseed just before baking.

Some men wear out shirts in prominent places before wearing out the whole garment. It is impossible to match all sorts of shirt patterns and one housewife solved the problem by removing pieces of patches from the tail of the shirt.

Can You Keep a Little Secret?

With Help, He Will Learn

Baby Should Not Fear Strangers

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

When a child meets a new situation and feels that he cannot deal with it, or escape it, he develops an emotion of fear. The more helpless he feels, the more quickly the fear response degenerates into horror.

At about 9 to 12 months of age children become more self-conscious about strangers. They may resent or fear being picked up or made over by them. If they have had their mothers as a constant part of each home or outdoor situation, they are terror-stricken if she leaves them.

This fear should end when babies discover, born thespians that they are, that strangers have not only pleasant ways, sometimes enjoyable gifts, but an endearing interest in their activities. This new audience is so welcome that they forget their fears.

Dislikes Other Children

Mrs. R. V. C. writes: "I have no problems with my baby except the one that he screams at the sight of other persons, especially babies and children, the whole time he is out for his airing. He will not let anyone hold him but me and even his father cannot care for him unless I am in the room. If I go out he screams until I come back.

"I am new here and so have stayed pretty close to my own apartment. I admit that he has been showered with love and attention since birth, and I feel now that it has been of harm to him—he clings to me as if I were the only person in the world. He has been this way since his fifth month, and he is now nine months old."

The constant presence of one caretaker is certain to become so fixed a part of the baby's experiences that he is fearful when there is a change. What he needs to discover is that there are other loving, protecting persons in the world. He will learn this the more quickly if you are not distraught by his crying and will continue to talk in a soothing, calm way to him and reassure him constantly that there is nothing of which to be afraid. He will understand your attitude if not your words.

Father Can Help

Allow the father to care for him some part of each day, and when you come back into the room, even if the baby has been crying, do not go near him or act as if he needed soothing. Just let the father continue to play with, talk to and distract him.

When he has become accustomed to being with him alone, then bring in another person, some accommodating relative, or friend or neighbor and try the same tactics. Put the baby in a carriage or playpen, let the stranger talk to him, go out of the room come back and ignore him, until he is convinced that no one and nothing will harm him whether you are or are not with him.

About an Old 'Count-Out' Song

I wonder if you or some of your readers could tell me this: About 10 or 15 years ago children used to sing a song, while jumping rope, which went like this:

"My mother, your mother
Live across the way;
Every day they made a fight
And this is what they'd say—"

I would like to know the last part of this, which I forget. It said something about a soda cracker. A. V.

The version I have heard of this little song, sometimes used as a "count-out" by children, goes like this:

My papa is a butcher,
My mamma cuts meat,
I'm a little toothpick,
Running 'round the street.
There was a mighty man
Lived half a mile away,
And every night he used to fight
And this is what he'd say:

"Acka, backa, soda cracker,
Acka, backa, boo,
Acka, backa, soda cracker,
Out goes you."

This doesn't make too much sense, but it is the way I heard a child recite it. It sounds as though it were at least related to the one you have in mind. Has any reader a version more like the one given by A. V.?

Can you tell me if there is a dairy in Washington that will deliver pasteurized goat's milk? If there is no dairy that will deliver, is there anyone in the Washington vicinity who sells it? If you do not have this information, will you please publish my question? I am sure there are many mothers in the metropolitan area of Washington who have children allergic to cow's milk and who need a convenient source of goat's milk. J. B. M.

There are no goat dairies in this area that deliver the milk. However, there are a number of people who raise goats as a hobby and sell the milk on a small scale. To find out if any of these live near you and if you can make arrangements for conveniently obtaining the milk, I suggest that you contact Donald E. Bennett of the Capital Dairy Goat Association. He lives at Falls Church and his telephone number is FA. 8113. Fresh goat's milk is also sold by some of the health stores in Washington. Evaporated goat's milk is available through many large drug stores. It is canned in California. If the store hasn't it in stock, it is likely they will order it for you.

I enjoy your column very much even though I belong to the other sex. On my way to the comic page I pause to see what problems you are solving. And I'm not confusing you with Mary Haworth. I have a problem and would like you to help me out. I used a plastic liquid finish on a mahogany chest. Now my wife doesn't like the way it looks and wants me to remove it and use wax to give it a finish. I've tried turpentine and cleaning fluid on the finish but it won't come off. Do you know any way this preparation can be removed safely? I should appreciate knowing what to do. S. C.

To remove this type of finish, use a commercial paint and varnish remover. Of course, this will also remove any finish which may be under the plastic.

We have just purchased a very handsome antique sideboard which my husband expects to restore since he is an expert in such things. Could you tell us where we could obtain material to line one drawer with tarnish-proof material such as is used in tarnish-proof chests and about how much such material costs? L. F. J.

The houseware departments where silver tarnish preventatives are sold also sell tarnish-proof flannel which can be used for lining drawers. This comes in a piece 24 by 27 inches square and sells for around a dollar. In addition to lining the drawer it would be wise to buy enough to lay over the silver to protect it better from air and keep it tarnish-free.

He Sells Garlic In Cellophane

Vashon, Wash. (U.P.)—L. A. Pierce, a retired advertising salesman, has built up a $150,000 business packing and marketing garlic in cellophane bags.

Pierce got started in the garlic-packaging business after he retired to a 25-acre farm here. The first year he planted an acre of garlic. But his background in the selling game would not be denied. He decided to sell his garlic in cellophane bags.

Housewives liked the idea, and since August, 1945, the 50-year-old Pierce has marketed more than one million packages. In addition to his own crop, Pierce obtains garlic from other Washington areas and imports from 20 to 25 tons a year from California.

'Sterling' Derivation

The word sterling has an interesting background. During the seventeenth century a certain group of German traders know as "Easterlings" used to come over to England to buy goods. They always paid for them with pieces of metal which were 925/1000 pure silver. Before long the British adopted this ratio and it was called Easterling, until in time it began to be known as sterling.

Oil's Insurance Against Summer Sun

"Go soak your head" is a friendly suggestion from Lura de Gez, hair expert, to every woman who takes summer as it's meant to be taken—with fun in the sun.

Soaking your head with oil (olive, castor or mineral oil) once or twice a month during the summer is the best insurance against strawlike ends, sun-bleached streaks and a dry scaly scalp that will cost you expensive reconditioning investments in the fall, Miss de Gez points out.

The idea is to apply the oil to the scalp by parting the hair in narrow rows and patting each line with an orange stick wrapped in cotton and dipped in slightly warmed oil. When the scalp is covered, massage with your fingertips until you feel a glow, then wet the ends of the hair with a little more oil.

Wrap your head in a big cotton bandana turban and leave on all day. If your hair is short, and you're not near a hairdresser, you can shampoo and pin curl it yourself, using a half of a cup of vinegar in the rinsing water.

Gala Four-Week Exhibition

'Homes of '49' to Start September 11

By Conrad P. Harness

THE "HOMES OF '49" exhibition is all set!

This year, as last, The Washington Post, in cooperation with leading home builders and furniture stores, will present one of the Nation's outstanding exhibitions of new homes and furnishings.

Eighteen brand new homes, each built especially for the occasion, will be opened to the public for a four-week showing beginning Sunday, September 11, through Sunday, October 2. Nine of the exquisite residences will be completely furnished by leading Washington furniture dealers.

Last year's presentation was one of the most successful housing exhibitions ever attempted. Thousands of prospective home owners visited the 13 furnished houses located in different parts of the metropolitan area. The State Department, through pictures and stories, told this story of American housing genius to countries throughout the world.

This year's production will be bigger and better than ever. For most couples the purchase of a house is the most important financial transaction of their lives. This tour will offer the perfect opportunity to see typical new homes in different price ranges.

Sightseers Are Buying

"HOMES of '49" arrives at an opportune time. A check of builders and brokers reveals that the buying public has become convinced that prices will remain stable, or will not drop further this year. Secondly, many apartment dwellers are being attracted to home ownership by monthly carrying charges that compare favorably with their own rents. Thirdly, hundreds of new families are started here each month and many young married couples living with relatives or in temporary quarters are now in the market for housing.

Buyers are again purchasing homes as an investment in proper living, not as pieces of property.

Exhibit homes will sell from $10,000 to $60,000. The newest trends in household decorations, furnishings and equipment will be on view. All homes will be a cross-section of what is now available. Furniture on display will be from available stocks.

If a visitor is attracted to a particular home or piece of furniture, representatives will furnish further information. While no furniture, drapes or rugs will be sold from the furnished homes, duplicate pieces may be ordered for immediate delivery.

Dwellings to be displayed will be model subdivision homes. All are for sale. All can be duplicated by the builder.

Map Will Make Tour Easy

A MAP showing the exact address, size, price, architectural type, builder and furniture dealer will be published each Sunday in The Washington Post during the four-week exhibit.

The nine furnished homes are being erected and furnished by the following firms:

Malice & Brooks and Malcolm Scates; Fendall Construction Co. and Peerless Modern House; L. E. Breuninger and P. J Nee Co.; Muse Construction Co. and William E. Miller Furniture Co.; Cooley Bros. and Biggs Antique Co.; Ornstein Construction Corp. and Corrado's, Inc.; Colonial Construction Corp. and Rossler Furniture; M. T. Broyhill & Sons and Miller Furniture Co. of Arlington; W. C. & A N. Miller and Woodward & Lothrop.

This eye-catching, three-level housing masterpiece, one of the Homes of '49, is located in Malbrook, new subdivision off Sleepy Hollow rd., in nearby Fairfax County, Va. The landscaping is enhanced by the beauty of Pat Shadle, left, and Betty Snow, both Washington models. The Malbrook residence, still under construction, will be furnished by Malcolm Scates. The home will not be open for public inspection until September 11.

On Buying a Home:

Waiting for Price Drop Not Worth Ownership Benefits, Says Realtor

Early this month T. H. Maenner, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, suggested to member boards throughout the country that they sponsor a series of discussion meetings, the first of which might be devoted to the topic "Is This the Time to Buy?" In view of the great interest of the home-seeking public in this subject, the New York Herald Tribune asked Mr. Maenner if he would be willing to write an authoritative, extended answer to his own question, and he responded with the article that follows:

By T. H. Maenner

President, National Association of Real Estate Boards

NOW is the time for a family to purchase a home, even though they feel that prices may go down in the future. The only important considerations are that they are ready to buy and can afford the payments. A little incident which happened to me recently will illustrate the intangible benefits which I feel outweigh small monetary differences.

A young man came to me and said he believed he could purchase a certain house cheaper in six months or so, and therefore thought he would wait.

I asked him then if his parents had owned their home when he was a child. He replied, "Yes." Next I asked him what was the greatest help he received from the knowledge of such ownership. He said, "I felt safe."

"Isn't that the greatest investment you can make in a home? Can you afford to delay even six months, in behalf of your children?" I inquired.

"No, I guess you are right," he answered. He bought the house.

Home Is Security

DURING my travels throughout the country this year, I have been asked repeatedly, "How can you expect anybody to buy a home when he feels that prices are going down."

The value put on a house consists of two items—one, the economic or dollars-and-cents investment, and the other, the intangible or family-building result, which assumes a far greater importance ultimately, than any money expended.

There is a strengthening influence in the struggle for a man and wife to acquire a complete equity in a home. Home ownership gives them an extra lift through a feeling of being more securely rooted in a neighborhood. This feeling of permanency causes them to take greater interest in civic affairs.

When a family lives in a house 10 or 15 years, or even only five years, these intangibles that the owners receive from the home are reflected in a greater sense of security. This establishes the real value for the home.

No Use to Wait

SO, IF A family is really ready to buy a home it should matter little to them if such a place can be bought for $400, $500 or $600 less six months from now. If they are satisfied that they are ready to buy, and can afford the payments involved, they should not delay one minute in launching the purchase of a home—which, after marriage and children, is the most important step they can take in the pursuit of happiness.

In almost every city that I have visited so far this year, I have been asked, "How about business? Is it going down elsewhere in the country as it is in our city?"

My answer generally has been, "Yes, business has been dropping, both as to the number of homes sold and as to the prices." I estimate that the average price drop so far this year Nation-wide has been about 10 or 15 per cent.

It is my conviction that we shall be in a fairly even balance between supply and demand by the end of the year. Thus, I consider this price drop to be a healthy sign, one that will make realtors get back on their toes again as they were before the war.

It is a healthy sign for the real estate business that we get back to this balance which is, after all, normal. Up to this time we have been on too high a plateau of business and prices; certainly the past

Perfumed Blouses, Yet!

'Built-In Age' Revamps Brassieres, Brooms

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK, (AP).—This is the built-in age.

Nobody wants anything unless it has at least a couple of other features built into it.

This goes for practically everything from brassieres to bookcases, from three-color ice cream to cigarette boxes that play "Yankee Doodle" when opened. Even the pigeons turn up their beaks at popcorn today unless it contains three kinds of built-in vitamins.

Think I'm kidding? Well, over in Glasgow they've just developed a blouse with built-in perfume. Makes a girl smell sweet in any flavor she wants for months and months.

But this international craze to build something into something else probably has reached its true flower in the household gadget industry.

Looks Are Deceiving

TAKE what happened to the simple broom. It used to be a straightforward instrument for gathering dust out of odd corners. Then they turned it into a carpet-sweeper. Then it developed into the vacuum cleaner. And what won't it do now? It'll paint walls, wax floors, dry the baby, manicure the furniture and shampoo your rug or your dog or your wife.

In another year it'll serve meals, fight peddlers, attack poisonous snakes, and play you gin rummy for keeps.

...e has become so complicated by built-in gadgets that you can't even tell its function by an outside look. Soon we'll have to hang an index on each piece to know all it is capable of.

I always have a moment of fear when a host asks me to pull open the door of a new cabinet in his living room. I never know whether the thing will dump a sack of laundry on the floor, flip out an X-ray picture of my lungs, spray me with martinis, roll out into a sofa bed or just show another television wrestling match from Chicago.

New 'Master Race'?

YES, it's all confused. Try to dial a telephone and somebody complains you're turning off the air-conditioning unit. Are we living at peace in a built-in war, or dwelling at war in a built-in peace? Call a social engineer. The planet's awry.

The corner saloon no longer offers any escape. I met a friend emerging from one the other day, and he said with a dazed look:

"What a new slot machine they got in there! I put in a nickel. And what happened? Why the darn thing rang up a 10-million score, shot off three roman candles, weighed me, shined my shoes, told my fortune, played a big Crosby record—and reached into my pocket for another nickel."

There is only one way to end the built-in age. That's to develop a race with some built-in common sense. Who really wants a fountain pen that will write letters, brush his teeth, take his passport photo and—for fifty cents extra—has three knife blades and a bottle opener at one end?

Building Contracts in Area Gain 11% in First Half of '49

F. W. Dodge Corp., building information specialists, reported yesterday that contracts awarded for building and engineering work in the Washington metropolitan area increased 11 per cent in the first half of 1949, as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

The increase in the District alone amounted to 36 per cent with awards of $56,564,000. Nonresidential building awards were up 79 per cent to a total of $41,156,000. Gains were reported for commercial, hospital, institutional, religious, social and recreational building.

Residential awards, however, declined 6 per cent from the total reported for the first half of last year, this year's total being $11,532,000.

Permits issued in the District last month totaled $7,237,988, a large decrease from June's record total of more than 15 million dollars. The August figure, however, was well above the postwar average and included permits for 89 homes and 14 apartment buildings with 829 units at an estimated construction of nearly four and one half million dollars.

Construction in Arlington County, Va., during July, as measured by building permits issued, amounted to $1,697,306, with permits for 87 detached homes and a 14-unit apartment building.

2 Pa. Counties Mystified by Acreage Deals

Philadelphia, Aug. 6 (AP).—Residents of sections of nearby Chester and Berks Counties are speculating on the reasons behind "mysterious purchases of large tracts of farm and woodland at three times their normal value," the Philadelphia Inquirer has reported.

One report, that uranium ore has been discovered, has been denied by the Atomic Energy Commission, the newspaper reported, adding:

Most of the purchases have been made near the sites of old-time iron furnaces, some of which made guns and cannonballs for the Revolutionary War. Among reports circulating in the communities are that the land will be used as game preserves, stock farms, for a State university or that iron ore mining will be resumed.

Iron ore is known to exist in the area. However, the known deposits are of low grade and became unprofitable to work many years ago when richer sources of supply were found in other areas of the United States.

To date at least 1190 acres have been purchased at an average price of $150 an acre for land previously regarded as worth about $50 an acre at most, the newspaper said.

Real estate men involved in the transactions have declined to disclose whom they are representing or the reason for the purchases, the Inquirer reported.

Couple in 70s May Try To Build 11th Home

Brighton, Mich., Aug. 6 (U.P.)—The Silas Burgetts, elderly but still chipper, looked back on their 44-year "build it yourself" housing program today and said they might try to put up an 11th home all by themselves.

Undaunted by the fact that he is turning 80 and she is 75, Mr. and Mrs. Burgett point to their latest house, an 11-room three-story cobblestone structure, as evidence they can do it.

"This place is just too big," motherly Mrs. Burgett said. "And after you've built 10 other houses with just about no outside help. One more certainly couldn't be much of a problem."

She Mixed the Mortar

Mrs. Burgett mixed the mortar and handed up cobblestones to her husband during their latest construction project. A painter until lead poisoning forced him to retire, the gnarled, active little man did all the rest except the plumbing and wiring.

"It wasn't that we couldn't do the work," Burgett said, "but the building laws said we had to get some outside help for that part."

The couple worked from early morning until dark almost every day for 18 months to complete the beautiful home and landscaped yard on the shores of Big Crooked Lake near here.

"'Worked' is the wrong word," Mrs. Burgett said. "When you like doing something, it's just like taking a vacation."

Mrs. Burgett does the housework "between projects" and occasionally cooks a big meal for some of the couple's six children, 20 grandchildren and eight great grandchildren, who are frequent visitors.

Lived In All But One

The Burgetts are quick to point out that they not only built their 10 houses but lived in all but one of them. It wasn't strictly a commercial venture, they explain.

"Sometimes we got a good offer for a house," Burgett said. "Frequently, we moved to another community, and a tragic family accident which we couldn't forget was a factor in our getting rid of one."

Mrs. Burgett, who tried her hand at masonry for the first time on the couple's present home, is all for doing it again, despite a bad heart. The idea appeals to Burgett, too, even though he admits that they are "getting on in years."

"What better way," he asks, "to celebrate a 57th wedding anniversary this fall than to start another home?"

Luxury Apartments—Shops Planned

Corning & Moore, Architects

Arlington County would have its first combination luxury apartment-shopping center if plans for such a structure are approved Tuesday by the Arlington County Board. Sponsor is M. T. Broyhill, veteran Arlington builder. The proposed building would be erected on the west side of Lee Highway at Albemarle st., with 6 stories on the street side, 8 stories at rear, taking advantage of a steep slope. Estimated to cost over a million dollars, the project would contain 10 stores on the street level, 100 luxury apartment units. If plans are approved, Broyhill said construction could begin within 2 months. Present site has commercial zoning. County Planning Division has already approved the project

Five Stores Authorized

The green light has been given construction of five stores in the 5000 block of Wilson blvd., Arlington, by the Arlington County Building Inspector's office. Owner is Sol Netzer. The stores will be one story and basement, of brick and cinder block construction.

Plan Frame Bungalows

Truden Co., Inc., plans to erect 10 homes in the nearby Maryland area. Seven will be on the Kensington-Wheaton rd., and three on Warner ave., near Wheaton. Homes will be basementless bungalows, of frame construction.

Dormitory Rents Decontrolled

Housing accommodations operated by educational or charitable institutions have been exempted from Federal rent control, Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods has announced. An example of such housing accommodations is an apartment owned by a university and rented to married students or faculty members and their families. College dormitories had previously been exempted from the rooming house regulation.

Also exempted are housing accommodations rented by the Army, Navy or Air Force.

Realty Firm Sets Record During July

If there is a recession, depression or lack of home buyers, Arlington Realty Co. hasn't heard about it. The firm has just marked off the month of July as their best sales month since April of last year, with 38 homes sold for more than $500,000.

Henry A. Florance, sales manager, said his salesforce of 12 were expecting another good month in August, with prospective home buyers showing renewed interest in getting settled before September.

The firm's sales record for July reveals that medium priced homes, around $13,800, were in highest demand. The average down payment required was from $2000 to $2500, he added. About 50 per cent of the sales were for new homes.

"People seem to realize that the few dollars they may save by waiting for a $200 or $300 price drop isn't worth the pleasure and security of owning their own home immediately," he pointed out. "Most people will spend more in rental charges by waiting for a possible price drop than they would if they purchased a home today."

Turkey is now working on an 18,000-mile road building program aided by American capital, know-how and machinery.

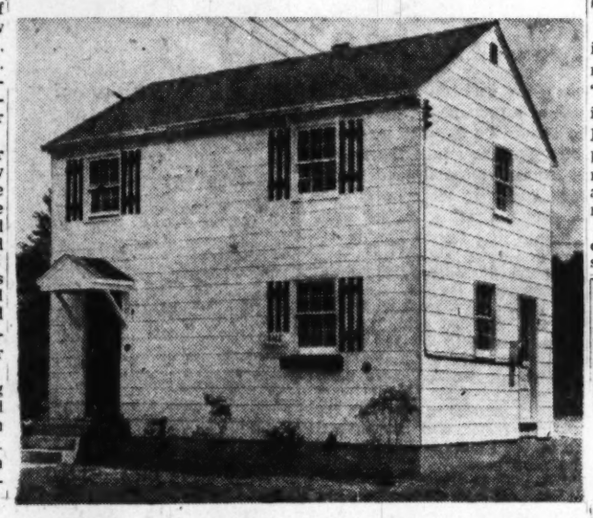
2-Story Homes at $8250 Make Debut

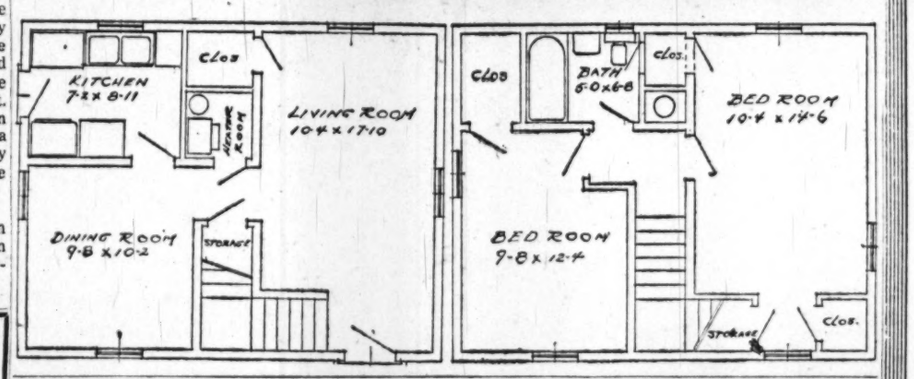
Homes selling at $8250, one of the lowest price tags set on new houses here since prewar years, have been announced by R. H. Best, Maryland builder and developer. The project is on Croydon ave., off Viers Mill rd., near Rockville, Md.

Best said 16 homes were under way, with a sample home already completed. Another 17 will be started soon. The residences are two-story detached, five rooms and bath, of asbestos shingle and frame exteriors

Available to qualified veterans at no down payment, Best said monthly carrying charges would be only $46.34 per month, purchased on an FHA-VA 25-year mortgage loan.

The floor plan shows living room, dining room, kitchen and heater room on the first floor, with two bedrooms and bath upstairs. There is no basement. There is a large storage area under the stairway.





Tips on Closing Summer Home

Careful precautions taken when closing the summer vacation home will prevent damage by weather, vandals and rodents.

The plumbing should be arranged so that all pipes can be drained by closing two or three valves and opening others. If steam or hot water heat is used, the entire system should be drained. Water should be siphoned from the toilt bowl and drained from plumbing traps. In mild climates, kerosene or anti-freeze can be added to the bowl and traps, thus avoiding drainage.

Provide solid, heavy board panels to fit tightly over windows and doors and bolt them on the inside. For the front door, use a solid panel that is fastened with a strong padlock.

The house should have sufficient grilles and vents to allow air to circulate and prevent dampness from accumulating. All flues, vents and louvres should be covered with both fine and heavy screening to keep out insects and animals.

Simple Coal or Coke Handling

TO SIMPLIFY the handling of coal or coke in small dwellings, the following suggestions are made in a nontechnical circular, "Homes Planned for Coal or Coke," issued by the University of Illinois: Place the driveway next to the fuel bin, the fuel bin next to the heater room, the heater room next to the ash-removal route, and the ash-removal route next to the driveway.

To demonstrate the ideas, the circular presents plans for a one-story basementless house, one-story house with partial basement, a split-level house, and a two-story house. In each, special features of fuel handling and ash removal are discussed.

Many of the ideas in the circular can be applied to existing houses. Among the suggestions:

Locate the bin so that delivery can be made directly from truck; design the bin for easy filling.

Make the bin large enough to hold at least half a season's supply of fuel.

Queens Housewife Has Useful Simian in Her Home

This Monkey Washes Dishes, Evaluates Girls

New York (AP).—Visitors have been flocking to the John Taral home in Queens to see a monkey that washes dishes and has a way with the women.

Mrs. Taral says the monkey also is a good alarm clock. Mr. Taral says the monkey likes cigars and screwdrivers, though he doesn't know why.

"You could put a million dollars on the table for my monkey," Mrs. Taral said yesterday, "and I wouldn't take it."

She said she has owned the monkey, whose name is Mickey, for nine years, since he was three.

"Every time when young pretty girls come by, he knocks on the window," Mrs. Taral said. "When older women come by, he doesn't give them a second look."

In the morning when she sleeps too late, she said, the monkey wakens her by knocking on his cage.

Likes Cigars

She went to get the monkey to give a reporter a demonstration. While she was gone, Mr. Taral said:

"That monkey also likes cigars. If he gets a hold of a cigar butt from the ash tray he'll rub it all in his fur. I don't know why."

Mickey, a pet monkey, likes to perch on the arm of his owner, Mrs. John Taral (left) wash dishes (right), then sit in the window and flirt with passing pretty girls

Mrs. Taral brought the monkey and placed him beside a sink filled with dishes and soapy water. The monkey ate some soap suds and then went to work washing dishes.

"If you let him, he'll stay there and wash dishes for two hours," said Mrs. Taral.

She placed the monkey in the window. Several older women passed. The monkey turned his head. Three pretty girls came along, and the monkey stared and made clucking noises.

Then Mrs. Taral took the monkey back upstairs, and Mr. Taral said:

"Once that monkey got one of my screwdrivers and before I knew it he had pried a board loose from that window. He likes carpenter tools, though I don't know why."

When the stream of visitors kept coming, Mrs. Taral said:

"No Mickey just can't do it any more. So many people have been coming all day. He's washed so many dishes and he's so excited he's sure to throw a dish at you."

"That's right," said Mr. Taral, "I'm sure I don't know why."

12 Permits Granted For Brick Bungalows

Permits for 12 more brick bungalows were granted last week for construction on Patton dr., Miles and Newhall sts., Silver Spring. Morris Miller is the sponsor, Humphrey & Quigg, builders.

The dwellings, part of a building program already under way, have one story and basement, of brick and cinder block, with a floor area of 43 by 30 feet.

Economy Suggestions by FHA

Indianapolis, Ind.—Two methods of lowering costs under the Economy Housing program are offered builders by the local FHA office. One calls for on-edge insulated concrete floor, designed particularly for the basementless house in the colder climates. This flooring is slab on ground, with a concrete trench footing designed to take advantage of both bearing resistance and skin friction.

The other plan shows a roof truss designed for 24-inch spacing for houses not to exceed 24 feet between outside walls. This roof truss eliminates the need of bearing partition, and utilizes wood members of small section.

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Provide Good Soil

Wall Gardening Weds Art to Imagination

By Alfred Putz
NYHT News Service

A GENTLE slope can be a real asset to the garden, especially if the area is extensive, but let it be just a trifle too steep and you will be running into lots of difficulties.

The solution lies in leveling some of the area with one or several steeper slopes to make up the difference. Where the garden is large, shrubs in combination with ground covers or vigorous trailers may be used to hold the banks.

This treatment, however, cannot be applied where the area is limited, if the gardener is interested in good design. The logical answer in such cases is a wall of some sort.

Try Weathered Stone

USUALLY masonry walls are too stiff, but a dry wall may be made to fit so subtly that its presence is an attraction as well as a perfect solution. Weathered stone is the more pleasing and it should be reasonably flat to give the utmost in support. Rounded boulders will require considerably more slant to stay in place and are difficult to arrange for a naturalistic effect. When well covered with plants set between them, most of their faults will be hidden.

A mixture of well-rotted cow manure and good garden soil, about equal parts, should be put into position between the stones while the wall is being erected and this layer must extend all the way back to make contact with the soil behind the wall.

The soil immediately behind the stones also should be improved so that the roots of the plants when they finally reach it will be amply provided for. Be especially careful to exclude all air pockets, which will doom the plants.

The choice of the plant material depends on the size of the wall and its proportions. The smaller the dimensions, the smaller the plants. Expensive walls should take advantage of varied sizes for greater interest.

Sunny Wall Ideal

IN arranging the plants consider also those which are to be planted at its base and top to create a harmonious display. Selection, furthermore, must take into consideration the color of the stone as an essential part of the picture.

It is well to select one type of plant to provide the main theme, with various others as complements. A hodgepodge assembly is sure to lack interest and character. Personal preferences can easily be made to fit into a good design if the gardener draws on his imagination and artistry. Keep in mind the exposure, especially in reference to sun and shade, and select the plants accordingly.

Almost any plant suited to the rock garden will adapt itself to wall gardening, which is more or less a form of it. The low sunny wall facing south will be an ideal abode for the various forms of sempervivum or houseleek.

Although they are fillers rather than theme plants they are ideal for the narrowest fissures with the rapidly multiplying rosettes following the crevices seemingly living on nothing but air and water. Together wth Alyssum saxatile, arabis and Phlox subulata they are ideal for dry walls a foot or two high.

A WELL-PLANTED WALL GARDEN PROVIDES A DELIGHTFUL TOUCH TO ANY HOMESTEAD

Select Plants Carefully

WITH so much good material available it is not easy to select a list of the most useful and beautiful plants that are reliable in our climate. Soapwort (Saponaria ocymoides) delights with its rich pink flowers in June. Snow-in-summer (Cerastium tomentosum) is a sheet of white blooms the late May and at other times the light gray-green foliage is highly attractive.

Dwarf veronica provides several good shades of blue during the summer. Equally good shades of blue may be found in the campanula family. The pinks (dianthus) give us attractive shades of pink, rose, red and also white.

The low poppy mallow (Callirhoe involucrata) creates a strong magenta accent. Iberis and creeping gypsophila are good white ones. Tunica saxifraga, with its dainty pink flowers, is sure to please with its airy grace. Aubretia is a wonderful thing but fails to thrive where summers are hot and dry. Oenothera missouriensis, the Ozark sundrop, has no better chance to show up its large yellow flowers than on the face of a rock wall.

Ferns are important for shady positions, and columbine (aquilegia), too, adapts itself to such an unusual position. Even foxglove (digitalis) looks well and this, too, likes shade. Cerastium and campanula thrive on the shaded side as well as in full sun.

Soil Is Like a Bank—Gardener Takes Out Only What Is Put In

By James H. Beattie

MODERN CITY and suburban gardens almost invariably yield the best returns on a soil well supplied with decaying organic matter, supplemented by commercial fertilizer of kinds and at rates in accordance with the requirements of the plants being grown.

Conservatism in the treatment of garden soil should be more generally practiced. Soil trouble is often due to immoderate use of commercial fertilizers and soil amendments. Excessive amounts can damage crops. The shedding of tomato blooms and beans is a common symptom. Even with such animal manure as poultry litter, which is highly concentrated, the same trouble often occurs. Moderation in the use of soil treatments, especially care in using concentrated fertilizers will avoid many troubles commonly reported.

Create a Balanced Soil

Those having a fertile garden soil should guard it jealously and make every effort to keep it in a highly productive condition. This is not difficult because fertile land has a reserve of plant nutrients and organic matter together with a favorable population of soil organisms. Maintain fertility through the use of composts, cover crops and fertilizers.

Several related methods are available to improve and maintain garden soils. Keep organic matter at a high level. Accompanied by the rational use of commercial fertilizer and soil amendments (usually some form of lime). Some will suggest that the old American gardening custom of giving the garden site an annual dressing of high-grade stable manure presents an exception, but such cases are now quite rare in this locality.

Compost prepared from garden refuse or from leaves, grass that is free from seeds or growing parts, poultry litter and other similar materials provides a very practical method for supplying at least a part of the organic matter required to keep the garden soil in top-level production.

The fertilizer used while preparing the compost helps materially in raising the productive level of the soil but, here too, additional commercial fertilizer will usually be required during the growing season.

Cover Crops Necessary

Another plan consists in mulching the spaces between the plants with vegetable matter, using fertilizer to assist in its decomposition. Cover crops used either to occupy vacant space during the summer months, or as a winter soil cover, prevent erosion and add vegetable matter to the soil. The choice of cover crop depends on the season of the year it is planted. Naturally, none but the hard ones should be employed for late fall seeding.

Midsummer is an ideal time to start a compost pile. Grass clippings, corn husks and sweet corn fodder, leaves and other waste material from the yard and garden may be turned into compost for next season's use in the garden.

The garden compost pile is not the place for the disposal of garbage but practically everything of a purely vegetable nature may be used to excellent advantage. Grease and fats should not be placed in the compost heap.

Excellent results are commonly obtained in preparing compost by selecting an out of the way corner of the yard or garden where a slight depression can be prepared, and gradually building a heap of vegetable matter as it becomes available, adding two or three handfuls of a complete commercial fertilizer and some ground dolomitic limestone from time to time or whenever any considerable quantity of the vegetable material is added.

Some use an inclosure of boards or a large box as a container for the compost. This method is simple, inexpensive and the results are quite satisfactory.

Compost Pile Tips

THE MORE elaborate method of preparing synthetic manure is of particular interest to those who have large areas from which quantities of green material may be had at low cost. This type of material is spread in a layer several inches thick and a proportional part of the chemicals spread thereon, the mass slightly wetted, and the process repeated until the pile is completed. The piles are usually built to a height of 4 to 5 feet and the ground area covered should be in relation to the amount of material available.

Chemicals are added to aid in decomposition and to add fertility. Prepared mixtures are available from dealers and their use saves time and trouble in obtaining and preparing the separate elements. A formula ordinarily recommended consists of: Ammonium sulphate 20 per cent, 45 parts by weight; superphosphate, 20 per cent, 15 parts by weight; ground dolomitic limestone 40 parts by weight. Thirty-five to 40 pounds of this mixture are used for each 500 pounds of dry material.

When using green or partly dried material the amount of the chemicals should be reduced accordingly. The pile should be wet down now and then and turned a time or two during the period required for decomposition. This varies from a minimum of about two months to as much as six months.

Tests by several experiment stations show that the synthetic manure prepared as indicated has about the same value as a good grade of animal manure.

Commercial plant food is most efficient when applied in trenches on both sides of the garden row

Carbon Black Hailed as Built-In Soil Heater

BUILT-IN heating for the soil, which would extend the growing season and help farmers raise more crops to feed a hungry world, can be provided through the use of carbon black, the sooty chemical that toughens automobile tires, declared a report published in Industrial and Engineering Chemistry.

Black materials absorb heat and research conducted at the Massachusetts State Experiment Station in Amherst has indicated that carbon black mixed into soil to a 2-inch depth raises the average soil temperature, both at the surface and two inches down, according to the report.

The results obtained in this investigation have aroused wide interest, and the effect of the carbon black treatment on crop development is now undergoing further tests at several agricultural schools throughout the country.

If an economically feasible process can be worked out, it is believed, farmers may be able to defrost their land and start planting earlier in the spring and, by the same token, to postpone the first fall frost and thus give late crops more time to mature.

Use of carbon black, which is made from natural gas, on the scale described in the report would be relatively expensive, at present prices, for the Massachusetts researchers applied the chemical at the rate of 4000 pounds to the acre, and usable types of carbon black cost from 3½ to 7 cents a pound.

Application rates as low as 2000 pounds an acre have been found effective, however, the chemists state. Moreover, a single treatment of a given tract should suffice for a number of years, even though some loss through erosion may occur.

There is no evidence, according to the report, to indicate that carbon black "acts as a plant nutrient, is itself digested by plant roots, or has any other direct effect on plants." Whatever influence it exerts on plant growth, therefore, is attributed to its effects on soil temperature, as well as on the texture, salt retention, and moisture retention of soils.

The tests covered by the report in Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, which were conducted as a cooperative project of the Massachusetts State Experiment Station and Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc., dealt with the temperature factor. Reports of carbon black's effects on other soil properties and on crop growth are still to be published.

The soil employed in the temperature experiments was a fine, sandy loam on the grounds of the University of Massachusetts, which had been fertilized. The carbon black was mixed into parts of the soil to a depth of about 2 inches, while other areas were left untreated.

Let's Get Down to Earth:

Your Perennial Bed Can Offer Challenge

By Katherine B. Pozer

FLOWERS THAT are difficult to grow offer a challenge to experienced gardeners. The novice will do well to commence with "fool proof" plants that thrive in the Washington area.

There are a dozen or more good perennials for the beginner's garden, so lovely they will be included in any garden containing rare blooms. Among them are day lilies, iris and chrysanthemums, which have been fully discussed in previous articles appearing on this page.

In planning a perennial bed, added interest is given by making a chart of the plantings. Fall is a good time to make such a chart, to reset perennials and to place bulbs. Perennials should be planted in large and small masses—depending on the nature of the plant.

Careful study must be made of the approximate height, color and time of bloom. In addition to the chart a calendar with space for marking down dates of blooming is a very valuable assistant in building up a really satisfactory border and one that will have blooms at all times.

Iris for Front

COMMENCING with spring and the front of the border, one should select primulas, dwarf iris, narcissus and hyacinths. All will survive almost any treatment and will spread. It is hard to think of a spring garden without tulips, but if a budget has to be considered it must be remembered that tulips must be dug up and replaced every year or so to give a good performance. They also are subject to raids by field mice and moles.

Fine companions for all bulbs are the Virginia Blue Bells—Mertensia Virginica—and the lovely blue phlox diveracata. Both of these charming blue flowers are native to this section and thrive in the perennial border, the rock garden or when used in naturalistic planting.

The mertensia will grow in deep shade. Its foliage disappears after blooming and care must be taken that it is not dug up when cultivating other plants. It is no doubt for this reason that many gardeners complain of its disappearing. Another lovely blue for shady spots is the Jacob's Ladder or polemonium.

The polemonium's foliage almost disappears after blooming and only the ridged roots that grow close to the surface remain to mark its place until midsummer, when it puts up a fernlike foliage.

It does not mind crowding during its rest period and we find it a good practice to have perennial ageratum close by. This is a strong grower and finishes its blooming just when the polemonium is ready to put up its new foliage. The ageratum then can be thinned out to give its smaller neighbor a breathing space.

Sweet Rockets Suggested

PRIMULAS are one of the most satisfactory of all spring flowers. They remain in bloom for a long period and offer a wide variety of coloring. The old fashioned "cowslip" with its cluster of yellow blossoms and one of the single white hybrids would make a good first choice for the beginner. A few plants spaced along the bed will supply enough plants in a year or two to edge the entire bed.

Second height plants should include some of the giant trumpet narcissus, bearded iris, Spanish iris and peonies. Remember that peonies require more space than many perennial beds allow. Lemon day lilies are always good if placed at strategic spots.

For fillers, choose such hardy things as sweet rocket, a very old fashioned flower, an excellent companion for iris. The lavender and white clusters make a good contrast for the heavier iris blossoms. This old favorite is very easy to grow in either sun or shade. It does not spread from the roots but a new supply of seedlings may be had each year if one permits one or more clusters of bloom to go to seed.

The columbine is another excellent plant that seeds itself. The seedlings may not run true but are always lovely. It is a good practice to purchase several new ones each year to supplement the seedlings and replace old plants.

Favorites with most people who grow them are the platycodons or balloon flowers. In bloom now they will continue to have lovely flowers for more than a month. Both blue and white are good. Phostegia, painted daisies or pyrethrum and penstamen are all good medium height growers. These with their pale pink tones are good used as color breaks throughout the bed.

Homesteaders Follow Tax Sales In Lousiana for Land Bargains

By Edmond Le Breton

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 6.—You don't have to go to Alaska or the great American Desert to homestead a piece of land. You can do it in Louisiana—probably in any parish in the State.

You don't have to invest in a covered wagon, or a squirrel rifle to drive away intruders. But you may need a lawyer before you get through and hang your patent up on the wall.

Homesteading is the process of acquiring land from a government, Federal or State, without payment, simply by living on it and cultivating it. It is the way most land came into private hands as the United States expanded across the continent.

In Louisiana, the land available for homesteading is property that has been taken over by the State for nonpayment of taxes.

In 1938, an act was passed permitting homesteading of tax lands to Louisiana citizens only, with the understanding that the settler would not get the mineral rights—the State retains these forever.

The big ledger in which the land office records homestead entries goes from 1917 to 1938 in a single page and subsequently lists 2159 applications for homestead entry, of which 625 so far have resulted in title for the settlers.

Essentially, you homestead a piece of land by living on it and cultivating it for five years. If you are a veteran of World War II, a 1944 amendment permits you to subtract from the required five years the length of your active duty in wartime up to four years. Some veterans already have homesteaded land in a little over a year.

The formalities are not inordinately complicated. There are several procedures designed to give the previous owner a final chance to redeem his land before homestead entry is made on it. The land office, which handles homesteading, wants evidence that a homesteader actually lives on the land, without leaving it more than six months at a time, and makes a reasonable showing at cultivating and improving it. The last previous year's taxes must be paid by the homesteader, but he is not taxed during his five years. There are fees, depending on the extent of the land and cost of advertising, but they are not usually very large.

A homesteader may stake a claim to as much as 160 acres. No minimum is set in the law. A few years ago someone tried to homestead a city lot in New Orleans. The State Supreme Court ruled that the plot homesteaded had to be large enough to be reasonably susceptible of cultivation. Since then the land office has adopted a rule of thumb that a homestead claim should be for at least two acres.

The first problem facing the prospective homesteader is finding land. The offices of parish sheriffs or tax collectors and assessors and the records of the land office itself are good places to start looking. But don't write the land office, as several people do almost every month, for "a map showing all the State land that can be homesteaded." There is no such map.

It is obvious from the way land adjudications go that there isn't much choice land lying around waiting to be homesteaded. Say an owner loses a farm because he can't pay taxes on it. He has a chance to redeem it when the sheriff puts it up for sale. If no one bids at least the assessed value, the sheriff takes it for the State. The owner has three more years in which to redeem it. If he doesn't the land can be disposed of by State tax sale or homesteading. It's hard to imagine a really good farm being allowed to go this full route.

Much property did go to the State for taxes during the depression years and not all of it has been redeemed. In the past few years, however, there have been few adjudications.

A final question is how good a title the State gives a homesteader who completes all the requirements for a land patent. It isn't a guaranteed title—it's as good as the title the State had to the land. If the former owner can show a substantial irregularity in the assessment, taxation or tax sale of the land, he may still be able to get it back.

BUILDERS OF COMMUNITIES

Raffled for 50 Cents

'Dream House' Yields Nightmare

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—Alfred Birnbaum, 27, and his pretty bride would give anything in the world to get rid of a $15,000 house they won with a 50-cent raffle ticket.

They are so desperate, in fact, they are thinking of demanding their four bits back and calling the whole deal square.

The prize was billed as a "Dream House," but to the Birnbaums it is a spine-chilling nightmare. It keeps them from sleeping. It's ruining their appetites. It's threatening them with bankruptcy. It's breaking up their marriage.

"I wish I was dead," Birnbaum moaned.

Birnbaum, a former Air Force officer and an optometry student at Columbia University, said he and his wife, a nurse, didn't have any hopes of winning the house when they shelled out 50 cents for the ticket. They didn't even want it, he said. They were contributing to the raffle only because it was for the benefit of disabled veterans.

They don't need a house, he said. They have a nice four-room apartment which suits them just fine. They don't have any place to put a house, either. And they don't have the money it would take to pay income tax on their prize, buy a lot for it, move it and furnish it.

What's more, beginning tomorrow, every day they leave the two-story house where it is will cost them $100. The structure was put up for raffle by the American Women's Volunteer Services on a privately-owned lot at 6th ave. and 52d st. The landlord said the Birnbaums have to move it by tomorrow.

If they don't, he said, they'll have to cough up $100 a day or he is going to tear it down board by board and cart it away.

"I've had it," Birnbaum said. "I went to bed last Saturday night without a worry, and I woke up Sunday and my whole life was ruined. I'm not the same man any more. My wife won't even speak to me."

Birnbaum said he and his wife didn't even bother to go to the drawing. They were sound asleep when an AWVS lady called at 1 a. m. Sunday to tel them cheerfully that they had won a house.

"A house!" Birnbaum shrieked. "My God, a house. What do we do now?"

That turned out to be the $15,000 question. Now he and his wife are trying to sell it at any price, just to get rid of it.

"I certainly don't expect the full price," Birnbaum screamed. "I just want my 50 cents back so I can get some sleep and so my wife will talk to me again."

Stain, Not Paint, Best for Shingles

Wooden shingles on a roof should be stained; never painted. Moisture will get under the paint film as it wears off, causing the wood to rot. Preservative stains are available in many colors and since they penetrate the wood, the danger of rot is avoided.

Shingles used as siding on exterior walls can be painted without harm because water drains off the side walls before it can seep under the shingles.

Oil paint should not be applied to shingles which have been stained, since most stains will bleed through the paint. Best procedure is to cover stained shingles with one coat of aluminum paint, then apply the oil pigment.

Basement Drainage

The basement floor should slope uniformly to a floor drain.

Check Roof Leaks During Downpour

Midsummer, the time of heavy rains, is an ideal time to inspect the roof for leaks, says the Construction Research Bureau of New York.

During a rainstorm, take a flashlight into the attic and carefully examine the underside of the roof and rafters for traces of moisture. Water travels along a rafter; a leak is not always at the point where moisture is discovered. Trace the moisture to its origin and mark the spot.

Set a pan or bucket under the leak only until a roofer can make a permanent repair.

BUSINESS is so good, says Director Tom Barringer of the local FHA Insuring Office, that members of the underwriting staff must confine interviews from 1:30 to 4:30 p. m. daily. The work load at FHA has been so heavy, he added, that the time limit is necessary if the staff is to be free from interruptions during the morning hours.

Mortgagee representatives, builders and architects are requested to observe the interview hours. Barringer and members of the administrative staff, including the chief underwriter, will be available for appointments during the entire day.

The National Association of Home Builders last week asked a congressional committee studying proposed housing legislation to raise the interest rate on GI loans from 4 to 4½ per cent, making them equal to FHA insured loans. NAHB said veterans are at a competitive disadvantage as long as there is a substantial volume of FHA loans being offered at the higher interest rate.

After being in a fairly steady down trend for four months, wholesale prices of building materials have leveled off, reports the Housing Institute. At present, building materials prices are a little more than 5 per cent under the level prevailing a year ago.

More for Less

ON THE question of relative costs in the construction of a home, the Lumber Survey Committee of the Department of Commerce has published interesting figures. A new house that cost $5000 in 1944 required 223 weeks' work of the average factory laborer. However, that same house in 1947 cost $9100 but only 191 weeks' work of the factory workman. That comparison may not reflect the average wages of all people in the United States, but it is a fair statement that a house, considered in relation to

As far as the former GI is concerned, however, he has an opportunity to buy a house with a small down payment and with a longer allowable amortization period, which means a lower relative cost per month. It is easier to buy a house today, as far as down payment and monthly payments are concerned than before the war.

True, we do have a definite problem of urging more and more of the larger lending institutions to feel a real responsibility for the welfare of the Nation so that they will reopen the doors to a greater percentage of mortgage loans for the former G. I. Such far-sighted action on the part of lending agencies will help us all, including themselves, in keeping at a minimum Government-ownership operations in competition with the private home-building industries, the reduced value of the dollar, costs no more today than it did before the war.

Such Government operations, no doubt, will become an increasingly greater threat to private building if more public housing is voted.

Seven Bungalows Planned in Wheaton

Brunett ave., in Wheaton, Md., is the site of seven dwellings to be erected by W. A. Martin, Inc., of Silver Spring. Homes will be one story, with no basement, of frame and asbestos shingle exteriors, with a floor area of 36 by 26 feet.

A permit application has been filed and subbids from subcontractors are being taken.

Home Hints

AN EXHAUST fan run in the attic at night can do much to keep the house cool and comfortable during hot spells this summer, says Erwin Johnson, agricultural engineer of the Iowa Experiment Station.

An exhause fan, 18 to 21 inches in diameter, placed in an attic window, can carry out heated air and thus reduce the inside temperature to the cooler outdoor temperature, if the fan runs during the night.

Mr. Johnson suggests using such a fan between 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening and about 5 o'clock in the morning. The attic window should be open at this time as well as doors in the main part of the house leading up to the attic. A fan smaller than 18 to 21 inches in diameter will not give satisfactory cooling, Mr. Johnson reports.

Most housewives know that in hot weather, outside windows and doors should be opened at night but closed during the day to hold in the cooled air, but many do not take full advantage of the help of night fanning.

The effectiveness of exhaust fans depends considerably on whether or not the house is insulated, Mr. Johnson explains. Uninsulated houses heat up faster and are more difficult to keep cool than well-insulated houses.

Pulling air through the basement during hot days, Mr. Johnson says, may cause moisture to condense on basement walls. To prevent condensation, the time to open and air the basement is when the outdoor temperature is cooler.

An exhaust fan in a kitchen window or installed in the wall may be used effectively when cooking is going on during the day to carry off heat from the range. Such a fan can force hot air out immediately to prevent it from spreading through the house.

Coward Makes a Great Entrance While Working in the 'Bioscope'

By Richard L. Coe

MOVIE STUDIOS the world over are pretty much alike, business-like confusion in concrete halls. A few weeks ago I visited two of J. Arthur Rank's empire in England—Denham, which is large and stark; Pinewood, which is elegant and charming.

Noel Coward stretched his considerable length out on one of those canvas chairs that are a hallmark of movie sets.

"Yes," he said, "here I am back in the bioscope. Never expected to be. In fact, that accounts for my first startling entrance this morning. All these cables and floor-markers. So as I'm stepping into the camera's eye for the first time in some years, what do I do but fall flat on my face, cameras grinding the while. They will, I trust, destroy that negative of my inelegant entrance." His eyes sparkled and you knew he couldn't care less what happened to that record of Coward clumsiness.

He'd Have Pleased Lincoln

FOR DESPITE his reputation as the sophisticate of sophisticates, Coward is a man whose honesty and industry would have pleased Abraham Lincoln.. While waiting for a scene to be lighted (most of an actor's time in making a picture is spent in waiting, waiting and waiting), he holes up in his dressing room with a typewriter.

He's completed a new play for Gertrude Lawrence, that glittering sidekick of his school days. It's a comedy and in England will be called "Home and Colonial," a term that recalls to the English empirical chain stores; in America it probably will be called "South Sea Bubble." Noel's Gertie closed last night in London in Daphne du Maurier's "September Tide" and will be back here with it in a twinkling to play it at Husband Richard Aldrich's two summer theaters on Cape Cod. "September Tide" is an extremely unlikely entry for Gotham and if Gertie doesn't do Noel's play, someone else will.

He's also proof-reading an autobiographical sequel to "Present Indicative" and writing a new revue in that Pinewood dressing room. Apart from this constant industry, Coward's outstanding trait is his kindliness toward others.

I recalled to him an incident which occurred in Cairo when a drunken American star refused to appear for an audience of Allied troops and Coward had volunteered to take his place, though he'd spent 9 hours that day trundling his mini-piano from ward to ward in a large hospital.

"I've been waiting for either you or him to come to Washington so I could spill that story," I told Coward, "a form of enlisted man revenge."

"Oh, no," he clipped. "Don't do that. It would be quite mean. He wasn't drunk, really, was actually quite sick and anyway, it's over now. It's amusing you remember the incident, but don't use that story, please."

So I'm not.

Coward finds himself unexpectedly back in "bioscope," the enviously scornful term London stage people use for their daytime chores at the good-paying London studios. He'd written a screen play of "The Astonished Heart," one of those nine plays in "Tonight at 8:30," from another of which had come his hugely popular "Brief Encounter." Michael Redgrave had spent three weeks filming the lead, but felt he wasn't getting at the part.

"So we talked it over and Michael urged me to take it from him. I said we could explain he was ill and had to withdraw. 'No,' said Michael, 'let's tell the truth for a change.' So Michael told the press that he wasn't right for the part and that he'd asked me to take over."

It All Takes Patience

ON ANOTHER set David Lean is directing his wife, Ann Todd (now at the Playhouse in "One Woman's Story," in "Madeleine," one of the classic murder yarns of 100 years ago. Lean, who directed "Great Expectations" and "Oliver Twist" (which is a story we'll go into at another time), is one of the bright young men of British films and got his first place in the spotlight under Coward. The Madeleine Smith murder case has rested "non proven" under Scottish laws and it's taken a long while to get the picture started. Originally it was set for Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh.

Gal and Gambler

UP FROM "OKLAHOMA!"—Not so long ago Shelley Winters was a dancer in the long-lived musical, "Oklahoma!" Now she's on the Palace screen with Alan Ladd in "The Great Gatsby" and opens Thursday at the Capitol, costarred with William Powell, in "Take One False Step."

NOW IT'S Gregory Peck (below, left) who takes to the present screen trend in gamblers. Gregory, Ava Gardner, Melvyn Douglas, Ethel Barrymore and Walter Huston are due at the Palace soon in "The Great Sinner," who turns out to be a Russian gambler.

Well, Dear Old Opera, How You Have Aged!

By Paul Hume

OPERA is such a funny business—at least the way it's seen and heard in America these days.

Just look at the operas the San Carlo Opera Company is putting on at the Watergate these two weeks in August, 1949. Their average age is just over 72. The oldest, Rigoletto, Traviata, and Faust, are in their nineties. The youngest (!), Madame Butterfly, is 45, an age no lady ever admits, even if she is a madame.

GALLO

Now if these operas were being given only by Fortune Gallo's San San Carlo Opera Company as it roams about our country, we would have little objection. A real case could be made for the presentation, preservation, and performance of these works, which have achieved incredible totals of hearings since their premieres. And it is not unreasonable that the hinterlands of America should see at least certain of these landmarks.

No one who wishes to hear opera can have much excuse for not knowing all of these nine operas well. For the Metropolitan Opera in New York, which claims to be the fountainhead of operatic culture in this country, has been singing them every Saturday for years, in radio broadcasts carried throughout this land and Canada.

And Heaven knows the Metropolitan could not keep its doors open if it tried to get through a season without any six of these famous pieces. Perhaps you'd like to see their names again, as if you couldn't guess them: Carmen, Aida, Madame Butterfly, Traviata, Boheme, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci, Faust, Rigoletto; what a list!

Actually the Metropolitan could do very well without almost all of these. But we aren't concerned with the Met today. We are fascinated with the fact that a form of music, which exists almost exclusively during moments of performance, has so congealed as to be very much like paintings people go to see over and over.

Hard and Fast

IN NO OTHER realm of music has arteriosclerosis set in so hard and fast. Our symphony programs today, even in the supposed drouth of summer, bring us new music. Phonograph records, which must make money or die, acquaint us with the latest concertos, sonatas, tone poems, and symphonies of young composers in every musically civilized land. Even in the realm of opera, the phonograph plays a mighty role today.

It is only through the medium of records that I have the amazed sense of learning to love every note of Maurice Ravel's exquisite opera-fantasy, L'Enfant et les Sortileges. Years ago I became familiar in the same way with his spicy opera, L'Heure Espagnole.

Opera recordings from Wagner's Die Walkure, Meistersinger, Strauss' Elektra, and other standard and not so standard works surpass the best now heard in our native opera houses. And these records make money, even when their material is unfamiliar.

What's the Secret?

WHAT, THEN, is the secret of this deathlike grip over opera, possessed by a dozen or so worn out scores. Now let's clear up a point or two: I do not consider Carmen or Butterfly or Boheme worn out. I can even stretch a point in favor of Aida when it is properly sung. But it is so seldom sung that way that it usually ends up sounding more worn out than almost any other opera.

But in other realms of music we have passed so far beyond the piddling bombast of Rigoletto, Trovatore, and much of Traviata, that we look rather foolish sitting there acting as if we were in the presence of high art. As Bernard Shaw wrote about Trovatore, and he wrote 50 years ago, "Unless Trovatore is sung greatly, it is nothing but the vulgar passion of cub for dam, of male for female."

And as usual, Shaw was so right. That's one reason it has been interesting to narrate the stories of these operas night after night at the Watergate last year and this. So many people feel outraged when I say that Cavalleria Rusticana or Rigoletto contain vulgarities of speech and conduct which they would not like to hear translated.

Who is surprised that Gilda is raped in Act II of Rigoletto? Only the opera-loving audience which has for years wondered why she seemed so distressed when her father finally rescued her from the Duke. Of course, the program refers to the Duke as a profligate, but we don't believe things like "that" happen in something as arty as opera.

Blame Not Gallo

DON'T BLAME FORTUNE GALLO for this state of affairs. During his 38 years of controlling the San Carlo company, he has presented Verdi's Otello, an opera worth far more than Rigoletto, Trovatore, and Traviata, combined. He has put on masterpages of Donizetti, and the relative novelty of Andrea Chenier, and Jewels of the Madonna.

Gallo has even entered the world of Wagner with wholly respectable Lohengrins and Tannhausers. He used to present one of the finest Lohengrins in this country, the beatutiful lyric tenor, Dmitri Onefrei. When the public wants something stronger than the watery pablum they are now fed, some Gallo will no doubt be able to give them the roughage they need.

When we understand opera in this country, we will want modern, living scores that say something to us today. Then we will begin to outgrow some of the old, threadbare pieces that trot back and forth across our opera stages year after year.

In Hollywood

Lana Wants to Get Opposite Mason

By Hedda Hopper

HOLLYWOOD.—Stewart Granger, who played opposite Vivien Leigh in "Caesar and Cleopatra," will make love to Deborah Kerr in "King Solomon's Mines." He goes directly from England to Africa, with headquarters in Nairobi, where most of the picture will be shot; then comes here to finish the film. Where that leaves little Jean Simmons, who is supposed to marry Granger, is anyone's guess. If she's as much in love with him as she was, she'll go along for the ride.

James Mason hasn't even been asked by Metro to play Brutus in "Julius Caesar." But he is wanted for Lana Turner's next picture, and will do it if the Garbo picture, which is supposed to start in September, is delayed because of one of Greta's whims. If so, Lana will get her wish. She told me she'd cut her right arm off to play opposite Mason.

Shelley Winters is no longer with Charles Laughton's Shakespearean class. It wasn't fair to the other kids to let Shelley come when she felt like it, but when she arranges her life so she can attend all sessions, she'll be welcomed back.

Pity of It

WENT to Ingrid Bergman's house, which is just around the corner from mine, to try and get a statement from Dr. Peter Lindstrom. The place looked like Fort Knox. A nine-foot steel fence surrounds the house, and the gate is padlocked like a prison. Not even a gopher or a field mouse was visible. Last time I was there, Ingrid emerged from the swimming pool like a goddess. The house, built originally as a playroom for children, is now a silent citadel.

I found Ginger Rogers, the day after her separation from Jack Briggs, on the tennis court playing doubles with three bronze giants. She'd been playing for hours. When Ginger finishes her present picture, she'll get a quiet divorce, then probably take off for a European trip. It doesn't look from here as though there's a chance of a reconciliation. That Look cover, showing Ginger and Jack kissing, was taken a year ago.

Celeste for Pacific

CELESTE HOLM is thrilled that Rodgers and Hammerstein want her for the Chicago company of "South Pacific." They haven't chosen a star to play opposite her. Why not Maurice Chevalier? Celeste you'll remember, as a big hit in "Oklahoma" . . . Adela Rogers St. John, Frances Marion and I took a day off and went to the Del Mar races. It was a thrilling day. Those two gals have enough reminiscences for 10 books. Adela's current "Never Again" is a best seller and deservedly so. It's a honey. . . We won the first race, which set us up. Betty Grable, who crowned the winner, looked like one herself. Evelyn Keyes and John Huston were there, but not together. Saw Mrs. Frank Freeman without Frank (he's in New York), two of the Ritz Brothers, the Bill Pereiras and Peter Rathvone. Jack Dempsey got us. He goes to Del Mar every day from the Scripps Clinic, where he's shedding 30 pounds.

Valdemar Veltluguin tells me that Beverly Michaels, a 5-foot-7 girl from the New York stage who kills Ava Gardner and knocks out Van Heflin in "East Side, West Side," is terrific. "Aren't you frightened of her?" I asked. "Not me," said he, "I'm the producer."

Warners made "No, No Nanette" in 1930, then sold the musical to RKO. Now they want another go at it, and bought it back. Ain't we got fun? . . . I asked Gorgeous George, who's making his first picture, "Pardon My Toehold," why he refers to himself as "Gorgeous." His reply, "Honestly" . . . Toyon Bay on Catalina Island, which started as a boys' school and was made into a lovely resort by Charles Farrell, went under the auctioneer's hammer.

Home Again

CHARLES BOYER, who expected to be in Paris a month, stayed two. He's back home with plenty of plans. Boyer wants to do a play and a picture over there. For the film, he's got the life of Clemenceau in mind. He has two film offers here. He came home on the same boat with Bernard Baruch, and had daily sessions with him. "What a great man," said Boyer . . . Charles appeared at a benefit in Paris with Rita Hayworth, but that was in late June . . . Ramon Novarro, Metro's star for years, goes back to that studio after 15 years for "Outriders" with Joel McCrea. When Joel was starting his career, Ramon was a big star. His last picture at Metro was "Laughing Boy," with Lupe Velez.

John Payne has acquired the rights to "The Dove," by Wilson Tucker. It's a yarn about a faded star making her comeback. Payne's gone back to the original title, "I Give You Maggie." Anne Shirley, John's first wife, would be perfect for the "Maggie" role. Wonder if she'll get it.

Robert Q. Lewis Is Funnier To More People This Year

By Sonia Stein

NEW YORK.—"If you feel some strange sensation on your radio, it's only me," Robert Q. Lewis assured his listeners as he massaged the microphone with a thin film of Glass Wax, in honor of the sponsor.

Said listeners are already used to anything, since they are Arthur Godfrey's regular CBS listeners (WTOP, 10:15 a. m.). They are even used to Robert Q., since this is his third year as a substitute for Godfrey (who is now vacationing in South America).

The audience may notice a slight difference this year. Robert Q., who has always been funny, is funnier to more people this year. Once upon a time he was funny to the sophisticates, the fly guys, the people who got the point of a joke about psychiatry because they'd had their own neuroses probed as befitted their station in life. Now, after long consultation with himself—and about six years in big-time radio—Robert Q. has broadened the base of his humor, found a lower common denominator and is reaping yocks for his trouble.

This technique of bypassing a good joke which may not hit all of the millions of listeners in the ticklish places, in favor of an old, tried-and-true item that will, has its drawbacks, but for commercial radio it's here to stay, and since Robert Q. has latched onto it, maybe he's here to stay, too.

A Lot of Sponsors

HE ALREADY has a regular wintertime afternoon show on CBS which is not carried in Washington—not sponsored, you see—and has been in numerous other spots all over the CBS dial in the past three years. (He's been heard spasmodically on WTOP in his own shows.) Before that he was a disk jockey on local New York stations.

But the really solid stuff, which is to say the sponsored stuff, is still to come his way. After the first show of this fill-in series, Robert Q. pulled his nerves together and crept into the control room. Was he worried about the jokes? No, he's used to being funny. Was he worried about the singing? No, he's sung before. What was worrying him? The sponsors. "That's a lot of sponsors to keep happy," he declared in all seriousness. He's not used to that.

(Lewis tries to be hep to the sponsor problem. "I used to think just doing a really funny show was enough. I realize now you have to make the audience love and trust you so they'll believe you when you tell them the product is good.")

Lewis is at his best when he ad libs. When something goes wrong with the program, Lewis is at his rightest. When Announcer Tony Marvin was 10 minutes late—delayed by the L. I. Railroad—on the first day of the Robert Q. tenure, Lewis made it grist for his mill. When Tony accidentally announced the wrong sponsor for the third portion of the show, Lewis gleefully ordered him to take one giant step backwards.

He scolds women in the audience who haven't tried the products. He does pretty much whatever comes into his inventive head this year, which makes the show a big improvement over last year, his coworkers say, when he was trying to time all his material in advance and squeeze it all in.

WHETHER it's the relaxed attitude, or the determination to cling to what he calls "human humor, the kind based on everybody's experiences," Robert Q. is quite a funny guy this year.

One of his major problems as a comedian has been his lack of "quirks." All comedians feel the need of identifying characteristics. "I've got lots of quirks. I MUST have quirks," he insists, mournfully spooning a chocolate soda in Colbee's, across from the studio. "You might say the Q. in my name stands for quirk, 'cause that's what I put it in for."

But the truth is he has no quirks. He plays up the fact that he's a bachelor; the president of his fan club painted a picture of Robert Q. with eyebrow raised, labeled "The Bachelor." This was to solace him because there is no Bachelor's Day.

He pretends to be a wolf. "A girl sat next to me in Colbee's this morning. She kept looking at me. Then she followed me up to my office. I thought I was doing pretty good for myself," he tells the audience. The girl followed him up to his office all right. She discovered his diplomas from the Gagwriters Institute (Doctor of Comedy degree for having shown excellence in creative humor in 1948) and from Radio Life for being among the most interesting new personalities of 1947.

Still No Sponsors

PAST successful substitute jobs for the absent Godfrey haven't brought Lewis anything in the way of cold, hard sponsors. (CBS loves him enough, however, to have tied him up for seven years, five still to go.)

But he gets a crack at something extra this year which may lead him to his fame and fortune. He's replacing Godfrey on the Wednesday night TV show (WOIC, 8 p. m.) with enthusiasm and what looks mighty like talent. The first show was a decided departure from Godfrey's TV show. There were stooges, skits. Lewis, who was determined to have enough other people in the show to leave the audience wanting more Lewis, doubtless succeeded.

Vic and Sade Rate A Vote From Crosby

By John Crosby

NYHT News Service

VIC AND SADE, the popular couple from radio, did a three-week stand on television recently on the understanding that, if they did well, they'd be invited back permanently. I'll throw in my vote right now.

The Gook family—Vic and Sade and their son Rush—and their preposterous friends are not quite as funny on TV as they were in their great days on radio but the possibilities are there all right and I'm sure they'll realize them when they figure out this new gadget.

The series is still written by Paul Rhymer, whose sense of humor is wonderfully inventive if sometimes a little trying. (He once left instructions for his maid which read: "Tear out partition between kitchen and dining room. Wash car. Paper the back bathroom. Put icebox where sink is. Clean and press living room rug.")

Over the years Rhymer invented almost as many crazy characters as have been heard on "Amos 'n' Andy." There was Vic's lodge brother who stole tablecloths. There was Gumpox, the Gook's garbage man, whose horse suffered fits of despondency. There was Third Lieutenant Stanley, Rush's favorite hero of fiction, who once stopped a runaway locomotive with his bare hands. (Dragged him 12 yards, though.)

Old Standbys Present

NOT all these familiar folk showed up on television—you couldn't get half of them on a television screen—but the old standbys were still there. Vic is as fond of inventing unworkable gadgets as ever and Sade still refuses to give them houseroom. Starbright, the perennial boarder of the Gooks, is still unemployed, still getting dimes from his wife, Ethel, for cigars. Mr. Kneesfuffer, Vic's best friend, is around, of course, and also the hatchet-faced widow who makes nightgowns out of canvas and uses hinges for buttons.

Bernardine Flynn, who plays Sade as she has since the series started on June 29, 1932, is sharp-faced, wholesome and competent on a TV screen. The rest of the cast is new. Frank Dane, the visual Vic, is reasonably satisfying but not much more than that. Dick Conan, who plays Rush, is a little bumptious for my taste but then kids of that vintage strike me that way anyhow. I'm a little confused about his age, too. As I recall, the radio Rush was drafted in the last war. This one doesn't look old enough to get out of the Boy Scouts.

Robert Q. Lewis is in again. Substituting for Arthur Godfrey on WTOP-CBS for the months of August and September, this is his third year in the Godfrey spot. A year-around comedian, Robert Q. is heard elsewhere on the CBS network on his own afternoon show in the wintertime.

Rathbone Is Next At Olney Theater

IN ORIGINAL ROLE: Basil Rathbone brings his most recent Broadway role to the Olney Theater for the week beginning Tuesday night when he plays Dr. Sloper in "The Heiress," adapted from the Henry James novel, "Washington Square."

A LEADING star in his latest success, one which gained him country-wide plaudits, is next week's bill at the Olney Theater. Basil Rathbone is the star; "The Heiress" is his play.

Suggested by Henry James' novel, "Washington Square," "The Heiress" also offers two other choice roles in which two leading actresses will appear, Erin O'Brien-Moore and Paula Trueman, in parts created by Wendy Hiller and Patricia Collinge.

The story details the fruitless struggles of a daughter to make a match which will take her from her overbearing father. Currently the play is one of London's hits, with Sir Ralph Richardson and Peggy Ashcroft in the leads.

Rathbone's distinguished career embraces stage, films and radio. In the latter he has been known to millions as "Sherlock Holmes." On the screen he played the classic detective as well as numberless pictures including "David Copperfield," "Anna Karenina," "Captain Blood," "Frenchman's Creek" and "The Woman in Green."

Dean Harens will play the handsome fortune hunter who almost marries the daughter, only to have her eventually slam the door in his face. Philippa Bevans, June Dayton, Porter Van Zandt and Mary McNamee complete the company under Harry Ellerbe's direction.

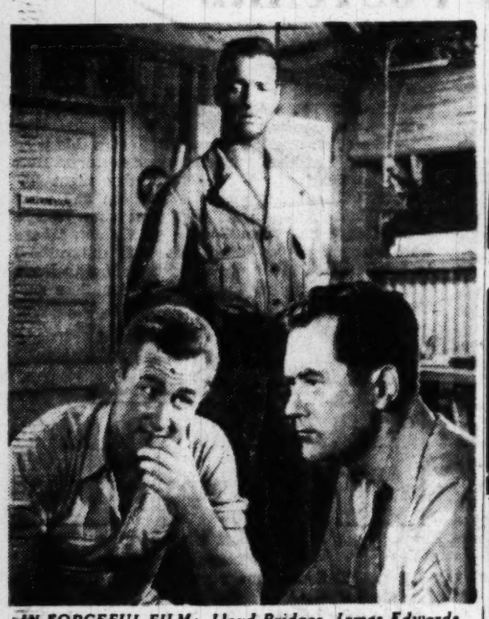
'Spooks' to Invade Cross Roads

A MYSTERY-FARCE will be the summer's fourth production at the Cross Roads Theater, opening Wednesday night.

"Spooks" titles this play by Robert J. Sherman, who tells of four heirs gathered in a dead man's home at midnight. They're told that to become possessed of his fortune they must spend three nights in his home. The author boasts that not until the last moment can the audience find the slightest clue to his mystery.

Cross Roaders appearing in the play include Dabney Waring, Rosine Riley, Lucy Haynes, Bob Huey, John Druckenbrod, Betsy Wetherill, H. G. Ogden Harvey, Lloyd Burlingame, Harry Cary, Virginia Jones and Richard Gulisk.

The theater is at Bailey's Cross Roads, Va., 5 miles out Columbia Pike at Seminary rd.



IN FORCEFUL FILM: Lloyd Bridges, James Edwards (standing) and Frank Lovejoy in "Home of the Brave," the picture about intolerance in a small Army unit during the Pacific war, now on the Trans-Lux screen

'On the Town' Tomorrow at Meridian Hill

MUSICAL COMEDY makes its bow tomorrow night on the stage of the new Meridian Hill Park Theater. "On the Town" is the show, a crisp, blithe, tuneful trip through Manhattan by Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

Leonard Bernstein's score, though only four years old, has become a cheerful memory for musical comedy fans. His tunes include "New York, New York," "Carried Away," "Lonely Town" and "Lucky to Be Me." The story tells of three sailors on shore leave in Gotham, turning up in such spots as the subways and the prehistoric mammal division of the American Museum of Natural History.

Players in the musical will be drawn from singers, dancers and comedians who appeared in "On the Town" during its New York run. Beverlee Bozeman is the leading dancer and has staged the dances. Miss Bozeman has appeared in several films, including "Night and Day" and "My Wild Irish Rose."

Jane Dulo has the Nancy Walker part, a role into which she stepped when Miss Walker left the cast. She's a supper club favorite. June Graham, who's been in "High Button Shoes," "Oklahoma," "Carousel," "Park Avenue" and "All for Love," is featured, as is James Jewell, veteran of the recently closed "Allegro" and "Song of Norway."

BEVERLEE BOZEMAN
. . . Meridian Hill this week

"On the Town" will be the sixth of the Meridian Hill Park offerings in the unique open-air theater at the Florida ave. end of the large 16th st. park. The downtown box office is in the National Pipe Shop, 1317 E st., next door to the National Theater. The park's box office is open nightly from 7 o'clock. Curtain time is 8:50.

Gay Planning 'Opry' Junket

HILLBILLY Impresario Connie B. Gay is setting up a Labor Day weekend train to take Washingtonians to Nashville, Tenn., for a performance by that city's famed Grand Ole Opry.

Arrangements have been made with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and Opry officials. Gay also has prevailed on a credit firm to advance money for pinched hillbillyites who want to mortgage their futures for the trip.

Gay claims that "the thirst for western, hillbilly and folk music can only be quenched by the ever-running pools of Station WSM and its corn-splattered stage in Nashville's Ryman Auditorium."

He reports that the enthusiasm of Tennessee balladeers for their Washington welcomes has prompted this latest venture of show trains. This past winter and spring saw the birth of both show trains and show planes conveying audiences into New York solely for a quick taste of theater-going.

Details are being ironed out; further information can be obtained from Gay's Radio Ranch, OWens 7666.

'Sweet Poison' Brings Sugar to Its Author

Hollywood (AP).—Lee Bowman, changing clothes in his set dressing room, glanced at a play script someone had hopefully left. The play has the intriguing title of "Sweet Poison," and Bowman said he found it so engrossing that he had read into Act II before realizing he had no trousers on. That's a fair test.

The play is now slated for Broadway after its forthcoming tryout in the straw-hat theater at Laguna Beach, Calif. Bowman is wanted for the straw-hat opening when he finishes his current picture, "House by the River."

"Sweet Poison," by Leonard Lee, already has been bought for a movie (Twentieth Century-Fox), and Ben Hecht is working on the screen play.

'But Not Goodbye' at Mountain Theater

"But Not Goodbye," a comedy-fantasy, will be presented Wednesday through Saturday evenings this week at the Mountain Theater, Braddock Heights, Md.

This summer playhouse, 5 miles west of Frederick, announces that its next offerings will be "While the Sun Shines" and "Separate Rooms."

Cugie Hits Gotham, Financially Hexed

By Mark Barron

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 (AP).—Xavier Cugat, the maestro of rumba and similar Spanish orchestra combinations, has just returned to Manhattan with a brief case bulging with songs, headaches, decorations, triumphs—and a lot of money which is safely banked away by remote control. In a few words, Cugat has the money but he can't touch it.

For seven months Cugat, who was born in Spain, and who came to these shores as a cartoonist on the Los Angeles Times, took his orchestra and flew off for a tour of South American countries. For seven months he journeyed with his band through Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Uraguay, Chile, Peru and Brazil and on those far voyages he found much new music, lost a bagful of new neckties and got punched in the nose twice.

Couldn't Take It Out

He is an amusing showman, this little man with a trim mustache, and he is as entertaining a performer as he is an authentic musician. Also, he has learned to be a Broadway businessman. And that is why he enthuses that in Brazil his concerts played to standing room only and crowds line up in front of phonograph shops to buy records made by his orchestra—but, as he says, "it is futile because I cannot get my money out. I played to 38,000 people in the bull ring in Caracas, a house which brought in as much box office receipts as 'South Pacific' is bringing in for a full week on Broadway. In Montevideo we played to 50,000 people. At the municipal theater in Santiago, Chile and in Lima, Peru, we played to similar large crowds.

"But our box offices were taking in all that money and I couldn't take more than a few cents out. And I was having to pay a $4600-a-week payroll for my orchestra and the individual artists."

Nevertheless, it was a triumphant journey, as well as a sentimental one, for Cugat said he found a wealth of new Spanish music which he is now weaving into his musical library for his current performances around Broadway.

New Music Mood

"FROM EACH of the South American countries I visited I have brought new songs and musical arrangements," he said. "In Uruguay I found a music mood which is an Afro-Uruguayan type, something like the rumba, but not like the rumba you hear in the Broadway clubs.

"Somehow music gets changed in bringing it north of the equator. For instance the 'samba' in Brazil is played slow, something like the pace of a casual walk. In Broadway salons the 'samba' is played with a fast pace.

"I searched for this new music on my tour and found much. One of the best, I think, is 'Gurare,' a Panama song which I think will be as popular on Broadway as it is in the Canal Zone."

Cugat said one of his first endeavors, now that he has returned to New York, is to work out a plan with the American Musicians' Union whereby South Americans will be allowed to come here to play with the same welcome that Broadway musicians find in the Latin American countries.

Because the South American musicians' unions assisted his own and other American musical units in their tours of the Latin-American nations, Cugat wanted to make some appreciative present to the musicians who assisted them on their long tour. So he gave $5000 to the musicians' union in Brazil when he discovered that one of their chief problems is that lack of calcium in the water and other trials of the tropical climate injures their teeth. So Cugat's gift will be utilized to assist the South American musicians with their dental problems, to insure that their teeth are substantial for playing the reeds and the brass.

As for his necktie problem in his tour among ardent South American admirers, Cugat said he lost at least 200 neckties snatched from around his neck and twice as many front pocket handkerchiefs. They snatch them for souvenirs.

"Thank goodness," he said in reporting the situation, "I don't wear hats or a toupee. Indeed, thank goodness that I don't wear much hair."

Explaining about getting punched in the nose, Cugat said the boys on the swinging end were amateur songwriters who got mad when he wouldn't be eager to play their new songs.

"For every new song written by an amateur," Cugat said, "I must resign myself to get punched in the nose two times, maybe three times. And amateurs write a lot of songs. I hope my nose can take so many punches."

TV to Aid Opera, Says Singer

SINGER MARGUERITE PIAZZA thinks television has what it takes to put opera across with the general public—provided a little streamlining is done.

"It should be opera in English," she declares. "That's the only way to do it.

"Suppose we had a Broadway play in German. Who'd go to see it, no matter how good the music?

"But the translation, of course, would have to be done by a very good librettist—one who could do a top Broadway musical."

In cutting down an opera for the customary one-hour maximum allowed for a television show, Miss Piazza would retain the popular numbers and drop out some of the crowd scenes and choruses. She says a wide variety of settings could be provided by projecting from films on the rear of a translucent screen.

"You'd have to have more intensive work on your staging," she continues, "so every little movement would mean something—as well as every little note. Because of television's closeups, it would require more subtle acting than in the opera house where gestures have to be exaggerated to be seen in the back rows."

The pretty brunette lyric soprano has been singing in opera and operetta for about eight years and currently is appearing on two mutual radio network musical programs a week. She also was on television recently in "Jacques Fray's Music Room" on ABC.—(A. P.)

Columbia Festival Awards

Columbia University's Fifth Annual Festival of Contemporary Music gave an award to Thor Johnson for excellent conducting; presented some fine, though old, Ives, Ruggles and Varese; a disappointing opera, "A Drumlin Legend," by Ernest Bacon; some conventional Louis Mennini and Randall Thompson; a labored Bernard Rogers; an uncommonly pleasant Hindemith.—(AP).

Six Nights Of Opera Set This Week

OPERA takes over again this week, before the great silence descends.

Last Wednesday night's Carmen was rained out. Tickets for that performance will be honored tomorrow night when the opera is given its rain-check hearing.

CRAVI LIKOVA

Six nights of San Carlo, with some good singing in prospect. Eva Likova, who sang in this country with the Detroit Symphony, and sang very well, is the Gilda Thursday night. The same night Richard Tucker of the Met sings. Another Metropolitan tenor, Thomas Hayward, who sang here last year, appears tonight in Boheme.

He will be joined by Mina Cravi as Mimi, one of the loveliest singers in this role today. Rina Telli returns Tuesday night in Cavalleria.

RONALD ARNATT plays today's organ recital at Washington Cathedral, and the rest of the week's music comes from the faithful service organizations.

Mary Cardwell Dawson, director of the National Negro Opera Company is lining up events for the annual opera meet and exhibit. The week of August 21 will see speakers and musicians participating in varied programs.

The festival is set for the 26th in Griffith Stadium.

Watchword Is Patience

The scene being filmed shows Jean Cadell (last seen in America with John Gielgud's company) carrying an exhausted Ivan Desny from a rainy outside to a bed. With one arm Miss Cadell supports the husky French actor; in her free hand she holds a candle.

Watching this, which will be but a brief moment on the screen, one is impressed with the nerve-wracking patience that goes into film making, be it Hollywood, New York, London or Cairo. The camera angle must be just right, the lights must be perfectly adjusted, the candle must not blow out, Desny's face must be clearly visible, the timing of his single line must be precise, there must be complete silence in the huge concrete shell.

In short, a visit to a studio is about the healthiest diet a hospitable movie producer can feed a reviewer. He comes away with a renewed respect for those vastly complicated skeins that go into making a picture which months later he will be seeing and commenting upon. It's a wonder that ever a friendly word can be exchanged between the carping critics and the put-upon movie-makers. Somehow, the gulf is bridged.

Williams 6th Artfully Done By Stokowski

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Symphony No. 6 in E Minor, New York Philharmonic under Leopold Stokowski. Columbia 838. $4.95.

If you love great music and a rare performance, go and buy this symphony at once.

You will be listening to it for years to come, and finding in it some of the same imponderable qualities which convince you of the greatness of Bach, Hindemith, or any other composer you consider a genius. The fifth symphony of Vaughan Williams seemed to sum up its composer's personal philosophy as clearly as musical means can be employed for so unmusical a task.

But this symphony performs a similar job and shows us a great man five years older than when he wrote the previous score. The music is powerful, particularly in the opening movement and the scherzo. Its themes are strong, its orchestration direct and concise. Its rhythms range from high syncopation through the long lines of an English folk song.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS
. . . perhaps his greatest

Stokowski has given the phonograph some of his greatest art in his years of making disks. This album is equal to the best, and the New York orchestra plays with rich sonority and instant response. It is a major triumph in every way, and a mighty piece of music.

SCHUBERT: Quintet in A Major (The "Trout"). Franz Rupp, pianist, with Stross Quartet. Telefunken-Capitol 8019. $6.25.

For years the ideal recorded version of this beautiful chamber work has been that of Artur Schnabel and the Pro Arte quartet, with Alfred Hobday playing the string bass.

Here is a recording of equal worth. Made over a decade ago in Europe, it sounds better than many of today's American records. Rupp, now known principally as Marian Anderson's accompanist, is a rare ensemble player. If his piano does not dominate the scene quite as Schnabel's does in the Victor version, you have the compensation of hearing all the instruments more clearly in this set.

Also the entire quintet is played on one less record, with a corresponding improvement in certain tempos. The surfaces and quality of sound in this set are excellent.

BACH: Suites No. 1 and 4. Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky. Victor 1307. $7.25

The tone in these recordings, made in the shed at Tanglewood, is sumptuous. But the hand of Koussevitsky lies heavily on Bach when it comes to clarity of style and flowing rhythm.

The first suite should move with such glorious spirit and yet in this recording it sounds more pompous than thrilling. Comparison with the Busch chamber orchestra in the same music shows exactly what we mean. And the slow movements in Bach must not become occasions for windy ritards and emotional excesses.

Yet that is what we get in the beauty of the long slow section of the fourth suite. Life dies in music under such ministrations. Nor can Victor be greatly complimented for its surfaces in this set. Why can't they find some of Europe's magic in reproducing sound clearly without noisy materials interfering?

STRAUSS: Overtures. Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy. Columbia MX 311. $3.

Ormandy waxes overtures to The Bat (Fledermaus) and the Gypsy Baron in this lush sounding set. His orchestra has the proper sound for this Viennese dessert, and he knows the way the music should go. If he lingers a bit over a phrase here and there, at least he picks wonderful phrases for his dallying.

Recording is perfect.

MENDELSSOHN: On Wings of Song; also: Mozart: Menuet. Jascha Heifetz, violinist, with Emanuel Bay, pianist. Victor 12-0963. $1.25.

It's Mendelssohn, it's Heifetz, it's schmalz—what more do you want? The Mozart is better music, better played, but it's not good style, except in the stretches. P. H.

'Microgroove'

Farnsworth has a new record changer which handles automatically the 10-and-12-inch standard disks and the 7-10--and-12-inch long-playing microgroove records.

A "micro-verter," including a turntable of changeable speed and a light pickup arm, has been developed at CBS for attachment to regular gramophones for playing standard and microgroove records on the same machine.

Especially in Boston

A Symphony Orchestra Means Business

By W. G. Rogers

LENOX, Mass. (AP).—About 35 years ago a young man in a Boston financial office was offered a job with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, he recalls now, "I was hesitant to go because I thought there might not be much going on at Symphony Hall," the Boston Symphony's headquarters.

However, he went. His name is George E. Judd. Manager of the Boston Symphony since 1935, he is the business head of one of the largest music operations in the world. And there's plenty going on. He has innumerable problems of music, personnel, parking, repairs, gardening, lunch room, housing.

New York State born, Judd is New England bred. His hair is graying, his shoulders stoop slightly, his voice is quiet, his manner affable. And he's always on the job, whether it's talking a selectman out of a peeve or noting thankfully that a gate is locked, as it should be, though it means an extra five-minute walk for him.

He Lists Them

HERE are the Boston Symphony's enterprises, as Judd tells of them:

The orchestra plays to concert hall audiences numbering about one million annually. It gives winter concerts in Symphony Hall and fair weather "pops" and esplanade programs in Boston; it tours to 45 cities; here at Tanglewood, its expansive and beautiful summer home, it runs a music school and, if student appearances are added to professional, gives more than 60 performances in the six-week session.

KOUSSEVITSKY
. . . retiring conductor

Europe may have its Edinburgh and Salzburg, but this country has, above all, Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festival. There are 230 acres of festival property. There are three auditoriums, a practice stage, a "barn," a "main house," an opera workshop, administrative offices and store and exhibition hall all in one structure, the "red house," where retiring Conductor Serge Koussevitzky has a studio, and finally an outdoor cafeteria, recreation house and six separate studios.

Forty acres are used for parking during the big musicshed events. About 20 men direct traffic on the grounds, plus some 15 Lenox and Stockbridge officers and State policemen on converging roads. At the height of the season there are 106 Boston Symphony players on hand; some of them, plus a score of other musicians, teach in the school; with clerical staff, telephone operators, maintenance crew, restaurant employes, stage hands and the like, summer employes total about 180. They cater to 170,000 visitors per season. There are also 465 students from 36 States and 19 foreign countries.

Alone in U. S.

THE Boston Symphony is said to be the only American orchestra to run its own school and to pay its instrumentalists 47 weeks every year, and it is one of the few to own its own headquarters. The deficit can be big but, says Judd, what counts is not its size but what it represents in service to the community. Much of Boston's deficit would be eliminated, he adds, if the Federal Government repealed the 20 per cent admission tax, which is applied without discrimination to the least enlightening movie or stage show as well as to the most inspiring music.

Is Judd anxious about the future? Not at all, he replies. "We are not afraid of hard times. Recessions do not slow down the momentum of a well-established product of good quality. All we need to worry about is the maintenance of that quality."

Fleeing Restraint of Corsets, He Found Freedom in Ballet

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK (AP).—A desk, easel or piano in a cramped studio will do for dramatist, novelist, poet or composer, but the poor choreographer must have a whole stage to work on, all his dancers to work with, and a pianist as accompanist.

Dance steps can't be catalogued or described, they have to be danced. It takes the entire company to create a ballet, says Jerome Robbins, who, having composed for both sides of the fence, for straight ballet and straight Broadway, speaks with experience and authority. His newest and biggest theatrical venture, is the Robert E. Sherwood-Irving Berlin-Moss Hart production of "Miss Liberty."

The black-haired, slender Robbins at the moment is deeply tanned by daily auto rides between this city, his home, and Philadelphia, where the new show tried out successfully. His first ballet, and first hit, was one of the finest of modern numbers, "Fancy Free," from which came, along with Leonard Bernstein's music, the Broadway show "On the Town."

For "Fancy Free" Robbins wrote a detailed scenario running about 2000 words. From that Bernstein wrote the music. Then with the score and his own original over-all idea, aided by some personal experimenting with the various sailors' gaits which help give the number its marked individuality, Robbins went to work with the required handful of dancers. For every minute of final dance, he says, there are 10 or 12 hours of creation and preparation.

A choreographer does all his intimate creative work right out in the public eye. He gets his dancers in place, and starts them off with a kick, bow, wave or scrape this way or that; if at first he doesn't succeed, he tries again. He has to be thick-skinned about the first failures. Experienced dancers in his troupe sometimes offer valuable suggestions.

Robbins just missed being a corset manufacturer, chemist or journalist. His father manufactured corsets. He went to college with chemical and journalistic aims. There was one child prodigy already in the family, his older sister, a dancer. About the time she abandoned a career he, inspired by her, took it up. He was 17, which is late for a beginning in this athletic field. But another way of saying it is, that he then weighed only 80 pounds, he got his growth later, and now at 30 weighs about 135.

"I like both Broadway and ballet," he says. Among his Broadway shows have been "Billion Dollar Baby" and "High Button Shoes." Among his ballets are "Interplay," "Facsimile" and, only this last season, "The Guests," one of his most effective and certainly his most mature creation.

Brought up across the Hudson in Weehawken, where he went to high school, he came back to New York, his birthplace, for his first lessons in modern dance; to pay for them he cleaned the studio floors. The "Brothers Ashkenazi," in which he was an actor, was his first stage experience; then he danced in four Broadway productions, and spent summers in dance work at Camp Tamiment, Pennsylvania. When he tired of the nightly routine on Broadway, he moved over to the corps de ballet of Ballet Theater in 1941. He tried short stories and they didn't sell; he tried writing dance scenarios, and they didn't sell, either, until he scored with "Fancy Free."

More Entertainers Yield To the Call of Television

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 (AP).—Television is attracting an impressive array of actors and entertainers of film, stage and radio fame.

Some still shy from video cameras, but scores of America's best known performers already are familiar figures on television screens across the country.

Two factors are speeding up the parade to television: One is that more well heeled sponsors are moving in with budgets big enough to attract the stars; and the other is the desire by the performers to gain early prominence in the new medium, and the accompanying fear of being left behind.

Since a television play has only a one-night run, the casts usually are different on succeeding weeks. But the same player may turn up several times in a month on different programs.

The variety shows and musicals usually have a prominent entertainer, or several of them, on a regular basis but they, too, change much of their casts from week to week as a rule.

Familiar Names

A CASUAL glance at a list of performers who have made television appearances—some only once and others frequently—will show you many names with which you've long been familiar.

You'll find such names as Charles Ruggles, Burgess Meredith, Paul Muni, John Carradine, Victor Moore, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, James Dunn, Margaret Sullavan, Dean Jagger, Edward Everett Horton and Boris Karloff.

Also Nina Foch, John Conte, Leo G. Carroll, Meg Mundy, Jose Ferrer, Walter Hampden, Joyce Redman, Judith Evelyn, Jessica Tandy, Mary McCarty, Sid Caesar, Hank Ladd, Jackie Gleason, Valerie Cossart, Jackie Cooper and Peggy Wood.

Others who have made appearances include Gertrude Lawrence, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Richard Greene, Charles Laughton, Una O'Connor, Helmut Dantine, Wendy Barrie, Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Lee Tracy, Luise Rainer and many others.

Neil Hamilton, Conrad Nagel, Lanny Ross and Lois Wilson have programs of their own and Bert Lytell was a regular last season.

Lewis Is Funnier

He doesn't hog the show. Lewis initated Milton Berle. He brought Godfrey into the act via a huge picture which lighted up to say "Big Brother Is Watching You," and a prearranged recording for which Lewis mouthed the words. Art Carney in beard, cutaway and fascinating accent brought "culture" to the show. (Lewis plans to use him again; they have worked together before on the air.) Singer Janette Davis, Announcer Tony Marvin and Musician Si Schaeffer helped out in a skit.

The whole show had an air of musical comedy rather than vaudeville—that buried art form which has been carelessly exhumed by TV. Lewis, who considers radio practically doomed after another five years, last week had already begun to put together his "ideal TV show," which combines "situation comedy and variety acts."

Looking stricken after the first TV show Wednesday night, because a mixup on timing cut the bang-up ending he'd planned, Robert Q. seemed unaware that he'd already put on a bang-up show, as TV shows go.

Went to Michigan

AT 28, ROBERT Q. has been in radio for close to 20 years if you want to count "Dr. Posner's Kiddies' Hour" and the "Horn and Hardart Kiddies' Hour," on which he displayed his boyish soprano at 9. His mother claims she knew there was no hope of getting him to do anything but radio. He studied dramatics and radio at the University of Michigan, and left there in 1941 in order to get a year of commercial radio under his belt before the peacetime draft caught up with him. During the war, he was "the worst sad sack you ever saw," being a colossal failure at everything except the camp shows, which he put on in high style.

Lewis is clearly a man who can't turn back, he's so far into this thing now. With both radio and TV showcases for his talents this summer, he will be mighty disappointed if a sponsored show doesn't come out of the summer stints. And I, for one, will be mighty confused to understand the reason if one doesn't materialize for him.

Vic and Sade Built on Tested Show Formula

Vic and Sade were obviously rushed to the television screen following the video success of "The Goldbergs." Both were once in soap opera back when there was some integrity to that depraved profession. The success of both was almost entirely due to their sincere, hard-working and original writers—Mrs. Berg and Paul Rhymer—who have stuck with the shows from beginning to end.

Writers Needed

AS ONE of the most insatiable conclusion-drawers of modern times, I should like to draw a couple here. First, television needs experienced and original writers who will be left alone and who will be paid enough to make it worthwhile. Second, the successful formulas for television are not so far removed from radio's successful formulas as everyone thought. That last is fairly startling. For a while, it was considered bad form to draw on any of radio's experience.

When you come right down to it, both "Vic and Sade" and "The Goldbergs" are built less on tested radio formulas than on tested theatrical formulas. Both rest firmly on the warmth and humor of their characters who are real enough and, at the same time, stagey enough to command permanent interest. If you care enough about the characters, you care about the show—even when the show slips occasionally.

The most distressing conclusion, though, is that the old-timers are doing better at this new medium than any newcomers. These two old radio programs, converted to television, are fresh as spring water. The new ones are tired before they're born.

Cantor to Take Quiz Show Spot

Eddie Cantor, headline radio comedian since 1931, will tackle his first ad lib assignment as quizmaster of NBC's "Take It Or Leave It" Sunday, September 11, 10 p. m. WRC.

Cantor has had some experience with the $64 question, however, since he twice spelled Phil Baker on the program in 1945. The unrehearsed program, first of the jackpot quiz shows, has been on the air since April 21, 1940, and will give the comedian plenty of scope.

Cantor, who has been heard on NBC in situation comedy shows for years, was a pioneer in having studio audiences. When he first came to radio, audiences were kept behind a glass screen where they could be seen but not heard. Cantor, accustomed to theater crowds, changed all that, enchanted his viewers with warm-ups, another of his innovations, and had a merry mood well established by the time the listening audience was tuned in.

Ann Rutherford . . . she'll be in "A Pretty Kettle of Fish" on WTOP Saturday at 1 p. m.

CBS Television Assigned New Washington Cable

CBS television affiliates are assured increased program service in the future through assignment to the network of a full-time cable to Washington, and expanded facilities to the Midwest, at coaxial allocation sessions recently ended in New York

This makes it possible for CBS television, in September, October, November and December to double its service to affiliates along the Eastern Seaboard, with an availability of eight hours of daily broadcasts.

WOIC is CBS's Washington outlet.

Conover Show Now Piped to Walter Reed

The Armed Forces Radio Network now pipes WWDC's Willis Conover "Tune Inn" show 10 a.m. to noon, Monday through Friday into the wards of Walter Reed General Hospital.

Conover's program features comments on music and recorded jazz. It is fed to Walter Reed through the facilities of WWDC and WRGH, the hospital's outlet for Armed Forces Radio.

WOIC Commended

Video station WOIC, the CBS affiliate here, recently was cited in Variety's sixteenth annual Showmanagement awards for "a commendable job on behalf of education and public service."

I Say, Tele's All Very Well If Visible, Eh?

LONDON, Aug. 6 (U.P.).—British television audiences began to wonder one night if television was really here to stay.

The British Broadcasting Corp. was scheduled to televise a play at 8:30.

Pretty announcer Mary Malcolm smiled to the audience and said apologetically, "I'm afraid they are not quite ready in the studio yet.

A newsreel was shown.

Mary came back on and said, "I'm sorry to keep you waiting.

A short movie was shown.

Mary explained, "I'm sorry, but . . ."

Then another newsreel.

Finally, at 9:19, Mary announced the play would start. The screen became dark and silent.

Back came Mary.

"I'm frightfully sorry," she said, "but it seems that once more we are in difficulties."

Some music was played.

Back came the overworked Miss Malcolm.

"Well, it's so late we have decided to change the program," she said. "In place of the play we shall show the Edgar Wallace film, 'The Missing Million'."

The "Missing Million" flashed onto the screen. But the actors' clothes came out white and their faces and hands black.

BBC gave up on that.

Mary, a slight catch in her voice, said, "We apologize for the breakdown."

BBC switched back to music Then it tried the movie, which went all right.

This Receiver'll Fit In Your Shirt Pocket

By Rader Winget

NEW YORK, (AP).—It won't be too long now before you can get a radio small enough to carry around in your shirt pocket.

Subminiatures they call them. The price will be subminiature, too. Plans call for units about the size of a couple of cigarette packs, priced between $20 and $30 complete.

Right away, a caution against over-enthusiasm is called for. The radios still are in the laboratory stage, there still are some kinks to be ironed out, and they won't make present radios obsolete.

Manufacturers always are reluctant to talk about new models for fear their dealers and the public will get the idea they should sit back and wait for the perfect radio to appear on the market. Like the gagster who joked: "I don't want a shirt-pocket radio. I'm waiting for shirt-pocket-television—with color."

The subminiature radio is an outgrowth of wartime research and postwar study. Some of the developments were a product of television expansion and new techniques in making hearing aids.

Fuses Gave Idea

ONE OF the leaders in the subminiature field is Dorman D. Israel, executive vice president of the Emerson Radio & Phonograph Corp. of New York. He worked on development of the tiny radio tubes used in proximity fuses in antiaircraft shells. These shells were exploded by radio impulses when they neared their target. The tubes had to be ultrasmall to fit in the tiny radio in the nose of a shell.

Israel believes the new subminatures will give a big boost to the business. He looks at it this way: When radio started up in 1924, everybody thought the phonograph business was doomed. Now look at it.

Television pushed radio to the sidelines in popular attention when it first came out. But today radio still is going strong, and the little sets will give radio a still further boost by providing a completely new line of merchandise.

"We used to talk about a radio in every home. Then it was a radio in every room. Now it will become a radio for every person," said Israel.

The problem of mass producing the sub-miniature sets is in the final stage of solution. Israel said: "We know what we want. We know how to make what we want. Now we must fit the parts together. We must develop the know-how of mass production."

The tiny tubes are a direct outgrowth of the wartime proximity fuse tubes. The radio circuits also are made like the radio circuits for fuses. They are printed. The ink is a substance that will transmit the radio impulses just as a wire does. It is like laying the wires of a radio circuit flat out on a board.

Made Quickly

ENGINEERS made an interesting compromise on the circuits. A skilled craftsman, like a watch maker or an engraver, can paint the circuits by hand on an extremely small area. But it takes time and money to make such a small high quality product. Mass-produced printed circuits are not so small nor do they have as high quality, but they are uniform and can be made quickly and cheaply. They serve the purpose quite adequately.

Other parts are made by molding powdered iron and silicate into a substance that looks like a sandy rust. Those parts are molded into the desired shape on the same kind of a machine that molds drug store pills. This is all a postwar improvement.

The loud speaker is the final problem. And it hasn't yet been licked. Engineers haven't been able to make just the kind of a speaker they want. Radios have been made in pocket size with ear phones and ear plugs. They are highly successful for the purpose for which they were designed.

Bht engineers want the subminiature radio to have a regular loud speaker that transmits the sound into the air with sufficient volume and clarity to make easy listening.

Gold Show Back on Air Tomorrow

BILL GOLD'S "District Line" returns to the air tomorrow over WRC. The program will be heard Monday through Friday at 1:30 p. m.

"Content and format of the show will be the same as before," says William McAndrew, WRC general manager. "Bill's choice of assignments is 'Washington the Home Town,' not 'Washington the World Capital.'

"He'll interview cab drivers and storekeepers, but the only Senators he gets excited about are the ones who work at Griffith Stadium."

Basis for the program is the District Line column which appears daily in The Washington Post. However, Gold says: "No item is ever duplicated on the air and in the paper. With so many good stories available, it would be a waste of space. District Liners churn up too many good items every day."

At the Bridge Table

Stone and Fisher Win Custis Cup

By Marion H. Barre

CAPTURING the newly donated J. B. Gregg Custis trophy given by Mrs. T. M. Boyle in honor of the late Dr. Custis, Mrs. Margaret Fisher and Jim Stone easily won the two session mixed pair club championship of the Capital City Chess Club. Ranked second were Mrs. Clarence Zimmer and Lloyd Tubbs, with Mrs. R. H. Skinner and Louis Tubbs in show positions.

At Hershey, Pa., Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg won top honors in the two session open pair event, nosing out George Dickerman and Miller Roberts. In the consolation game, Gary Arkoian and Wallace Ashby scored again. In the team of four tournament, the Steinbergs, playing with Mr. and Mrs. George Kathan, lost in the final by one board.

AN ATTRACTIVE week of Master Point games lies ahead for Washington bridge players. Tonight at 7:30 at the F. Arthur Walker Club in Arlington. Reservations must be made in advance. Tomorrow night the Federal Bridge League, 1300 New Hampshire ave. nw., and the LaSalle Studios, 1028 Connecticut ave. nw. On Tuesday, Mrs. Count reopens her studios at 8 p. m. at 1614 17th st. nw. Same evening, weekly meeting of the Agriculture Club at Euclid Studios, 1355 Euclid st. nw. Thursday, weekly matinee at LaSalle Club and evening game of the Chess Club at Gordon Hotel. Friday, monthly master point event of the Euclid Stephan group at 8 p. m. A game open only to members and guest card holders Saturday night at the Chess Club.

Leading at the end of the first session of the women's and men's pairs club championships at Arlington Farms were Jesse J. Duke, jr., and Commander O. O. Liebschner, and Mrs. Alma Byrne and Mrs. Dixie Wright.

At the annual invitational women's pairs club championship given by Mrs. D. E. Stephan, Mrs. Dora Schwartz and Mrs. Mary Goodstein won the nationally awarded top honors, with Mrs. Margaret Cox and Mrs. Leo Crane second.

Master points at the Federal Bridge League's recent nationally awarded contest went to Mrs. Violet Zimmer, Louis Fruitman, Dave Murray and Gary Arkoian, with half master points to Mrs. Edward St. John, Mrs. Mary Goodstein, Minnetta Lagerquist and Winifred Dutcher. At the Chess Club's Thursday night game, master points were won by Joe White, J. D. Boyd, Charles Johnson and Mrs. J. G. Fletcher; second place to Mrs. Elizabeth Land, Mrs. Zimmer, S. M. Cohee, and Wallace Ashby.

The Silver Trophy for high average at the Count Club for the past 10 weeks has been awarded to Lynn Carrier. A new series with accompanying trophy begins with the master point game of August 9.

Rating point winners for the past few days have included: LaSalle Studios: Clara Sternecker and Ervin Kenison; Count Club: Mrs. Anita Dearing and Charles Richter; Washington Bridge League: Charles Johnson, Joe White, Col. R. H. Skinner, and Jim Stone, Mrs. Dora Schwartz, Mrs. D. E. Stephan, D. N. Cohen and J. Rottenberg; Euclid Studios: Wallace Ashby and Gary Arkoian; Chess Club: Dr. J. G. Wooley and Mrs. J. G. Fletcher; Walker Club: Mrs. T. M. Boyle and Mrs. Maurice R. Reddy with Mrs. Geoffrey Woods and Mrs. Kent Yoke in runner-up position.

IN A POSTPONED game awarding national points at the LaSalle Studios last Monday, four players won their first full master points; they were H. B. Siegel playing with R. B. Hannings and Leona Kempainen paired with Beverley Emmert. On the same evening half master points went to Mrs. Ida Terrant, Mrs. Ann Scruggs, Mrs. E. R. Shepard and Lieut. Col. Henry A. Walker.

The slightly cooler weather brought out three large sections of master point aspirants last Wednesday at the Washington Bridge League, unit organization of the American Contract Bridge League. The Washington Philatelist

1 D. C. Commemorative Not Ten, Should Suffice

By William M. Stuart

NEXT YEAR Congress will appropriate a generous sum to help celebrate the 150th anniversary of the founding of the Government of the District of Columbia. Committees are already at work on the program. This event calls for the issue of a commemorative stamp. However, it is rather startling to learn that several in charge of the celebration are preparing not for one stamp but for a series of 10. A series is entirely uncalled for and it is preposterous to think postal officials will approve such.

STUART

It is true that the current series of stamps has not been revised for some years and perhaps revision is due, but to issue a series of celebration commemoratives for 1950 as proper stamps to supplant the current issue is unthinkable. It is sincerely hoped the Post Office Department will issue a single commemorative stamp for 1950, to be followed later by a new regular series.

THE POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT has announced that privately owned and operated Highway Postoffice service will be inaugurated on September 1 between Lexington and Fleming, Ky. Special first trip cachet and cancelations will be provided.

Those interested in special slogan cancelations may obtain the following by sending self-addressed prepaid envelopes to the appropriate postmaster with the request that the special cancelation be applied: Philadelphia, Pa., "Help Save a Life. Be a Blood Donor." Big Spring, Tex., "Big Spring 1849-1949 Centennial October 2-8."

Effective August 15, air mail service will be inaugurated at Coleman, Tex., on route A M-82. Special cachet will be applied, but there will be no point-to-point covers.

Belgium has issued a new stamp as a tribute to Gerard David, famous painter of the fifteenth century. The denomination is 1-franc, 75. The stamp is light brown and shows one of David's paintings.

H. E. Harris & Co., Boston, Mass., has issued the second 1949 edition of "Airmail Stamps" containing 160 pages of complete price lists of the world's airpost stamps. In the catalogue Stephen F. Harris has an interesting article entitled, "Men Against the Sky," which traces the story of human flight and the romance of airmails.

The Postoffice Department has announced that the current 6-cent air mail stamp, small size, in coils, horizontally perforated, will be released through the Washington, D. C. postoffice on August 25. Collectors may send covers to the postmaster at Washington, D. C., not in excess of 10 for cancellations. Only machine cancellations will be used, no hand cancellations to be given. For the benefit of collectors, 6-cent coiled stamps, unselected, will be available at the Philatelic Agency on August 25.

THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, President Galloway presiding. J. F. Gates Clark, a member who has been in London for more than two years doing a special assignment at the British Museum, was present and welcomed by the club as his work has been completed. David McCalmont gave an interesting talk on the Clarence K. Streit's "Federal Union, Inc."

L. L. MacKallor, who has been abroad for a couple of months has returned. He went to Europe by air and visited England, France and Switzerland and viewed the stamp markets at first hand. Collecting is a full time job abroad and United States stamps can be bought cheaper in Europe than here due to rates of exchange, he said. There will be another meeting on Tuesday at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

Coming Here in the Fall

Viennese Art Widely Traveled

Self portrait by Rubens is one of the works from the Vienna Museum mentioned in advance notices as part of the collection coming to Washington in the fall.

By Jane Watson Crane

OF ALL the ambitious art projects to be undertaken in the United States this fall, none will have more drawing power than the exhibition of works of art from Vienna scheduled to come to Washington for its first display in this country at the National Gallery of Art. Subsequently, the show, which is now at the Tate Gallery in London and has already been seen in several of the continental European capitals, will go to the Metropolitan in New York, the Art Institute of Chicago, and the de Young Memorial Museum in San Francisco.

We think of transportation of works of art as a twentieth century phenomenon. While this will be their first trans-Atlantic crossing, the paintings and other objects now housed in Vienna are widely traveled.

The majority come from the Kunsthistoriches or Art History Museum, some from collections begun in other parts of Europe five centuries ago or more. Formed by ruling houses of Europe, they have been moved about as their owners shifted their seats of power or passed them on to members of a younger generation. In time of war they have been depleted by seizure by the enemy. In one instance, when the Court of the Hapsburgs had moved to Prague and the city was plundered during the 30 Years War, over 500 paintings were carried away as booty. Later the Empress Maria Theresa had more than a hundred valuable paintings from the Prague Gallery transferred to the King of Saxony to make up the indemnity imposed for the Silesian War, an occurrence which accounts in large part for the splendors of the Dresden Gallery collection. Another inroad was made in 1753 when the Empress ordered paintings of the nude to be removed from the collections and sold.

Often Hidden

ORIGINALLY housed in treasure chambers or galleries in the royal palaces, the paintings were frequently hidden on occasions previous to this last war. After they came to rest in Vienna they were scattered about in various palaces until the Emperor Francis Joseph brought them together in the imposing structure on the Ring Strasse toward the end of the nineteenth century.

The Kunsthistoriches Museum contains a number of other collections besides the paintings gathered by the Hapsburgs, including antiquities and industrial arts. Nor is the Museum collection the only notable assemblage of paintings in Vienna. Some of the most famous paintings in the world were in private homes in that city before the war. One of these, the Vermeer "Artist in his Studio" from the Czernin collection, purchased from the family by Hitler for his proposed museum in Linz, is listed by the Austrian Information Bureau as due to come here.

Titian, Rubens

MANY of the artists represented in the exhibition of German paintings shown here this spring will appear again. The Kunsthistoriches is particularly rich in paintings by Titian and Rubens. There are notable works by others of the Venetian and Flemish schools.

The Vienna Museum collection also includes one of the largest groups of paintings by Durer, including his most ambitious oil, "The Trinity," although these are not mentioned in the Austrian list. Six portraits by the Spanish artist, Velasquez, are listed as due to come, and several by Van Dyck.

The decision to permit the exhibition to be shown in this country was taken by the Austrian Council of Ministers in June, in answer to a request made by museum curators in the United States.

North Carolina U. Arts Center Opens

Manteo, N. C.—Combining books and beach, sunning and study, and college credits with a carefree vacation, the University of North Carolina for the second year is operating the Roanoke Island Fine Arts Center here.

Directed by Mrs. Darice Parker of the university's extension service, the unique school, with classes held mostly outdoors, provides youngsters a chance to have their vacation and learn simultaneously. Courses include painting and composition, music appreciation, sight singing, voice training and dramatics.

All courses at the center may be taken for a regular credit and applied on a degree. Many of the students last year had a busy summer of it since some of them also appear in the symphonic drama, "Lost Colony," produced each year on Roanoke Island.

Barrs Exhibit

Probably the first exhibit of its kind in the Washington area, the Lee-Hi Launderette in Arlington, Va., is showing paintings by George and Edwina Barr. Mrs. Barr is a pupil of Ralph de Burgos; her husband studied with Pietro Lazzari.

Most Extensive

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City has the most extensive collection in this country.

Art Notes

Schools of Design Form National Association

DESIGN is an umbrella-like term which can mean a great deal or nothing at all. Particularly since the war, schools devoted to, or offering courses in design have sprung up like mushrooms. Newly formed is the "National Association of Schools of Design," established to develop closer relationships among them and to examine and improve their educational practices and professional standards. President is the veteran Dr. Royal Bailey Farnum, for many years head of the Nation's oldest school of design at Providence, R. I. Present membership includes 30 or more schools and colleges, with a number of applications from others to be passed upon this fall. Dean Rice of the College of Fine Arts at Syracuse University, is chairman of admissions.

That big Van Gogh show, already referred to in this section, is coming closer in time. It will open October 21 at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and continue until the middle of January, when it will go to Chicago. Thanks to the family of the painter, the exhibition will include many works not known here. Forty-eight are coming from the collection of Van Gogh's nephew. There are to be 18 from the Kroller-Muller Museum in Holland.

Another big opening scheduled for the fall is the exhibition of contemporary design and applied arts now in preparation at the Detroit Institute of Arts. Planned as a survey of the field, the show calls for elaborate installation. Special displays will be given to the leading designers.

There is still a chance to see the international sculpture exhibition at the Philadelphia Museum before it closes in September.

Anyone interested in photography should not miss the exhibition of photographs by Eugene Atget at the Library of Congress. Atget, who was born in 1857 and died in 1927, was one of the great French masters of the camera—a realist who anticipated the rage for documentary filmmaking in this country by some years. The show, an event which deserves more attention than it has heretofore received, was organized by Bartlett Hayes, jr., of the Addison Gallery at Andover and is circulated by the American Federation of Arts. All prints are lent by the American photographer, Berenice Abbott.

Washington's Sculptors' Guild has a new indoor-outdoor show at Chequire House in Alexandria. Upstairs and in the garden are pieces by Jane Love, Florence Bessom Higgs, Sarah Silberman, Adella Mills, Robin Brant, Katherine Hobbs, and Russell Houston, president of the group. Some of the material has previously been shown in Washington, including the appealing "Boy and Pony." Impressive are works by Sarah Silberman, represented by several pieces. Houston's massive "Cycle" seemed to us to come off better than his more ambitiously conceived study in limestone, which presents a contrast in textures. Jane Love's "Leopard" in bronze looks well at the end of the garden and Adella Mills' "Female Wisdom" on the mantel upstairs.

Self-Service Wash Patrons Soak Up Art With Benefits

By Cynthia Lowry

NEW YORK (AP).—Izzy Redman, proprietor of a self-service laundry on the East Side, finds himself a patron of the arts.

He likes it fine, he says, because 16 oil paintings above his 22 washing machines brought in new customers and charmed the old ones.

Redman, a former professional boxer who fought as a middleweight, is not the first entrepreneur who has loaned wall space to the devotees of line and color. His was the latest show by the Greenwich Village Art Center, which has been setting up exhibits in unorthodox places for some time.

Break for Unknowns

CENTER officials hope the practice will be copied wherever there are artists who want to get their works where they will be seen.

"We felt that an unkown artist had no more chance of being shown in a 57th street gallery (New York's art row) than an unknown singer had at the Metropolitan Opera," says Mrs. Maxmilian Elser, center president.

"So we decided to take the paintings to places where the public could see them, instead of holding only formal exhibits."

Mrs. Elser got the idea while talking to a bank executive who handled the center account.

"I looked around the bare walls of the bank," she recalled, "and told the vice president that the bank would be a nice place to exhibit paintings in—that people had to stand in line waiting their turns and it would be pleasant to have something nice to look at."

The banker went along and the center shipped over the work of artists who had won awards and mention at its most recent showing. Thereafter the bank walls were never without paintings on exhibition.

Bank customers bought some of the paintings, too, Mrs. Elser added.

Next, someone spotted more bare space on the walls of the lounge in a Greenwich Village movie theater. So a "roving exhibit" of the center went in there, too. Pretty soon the center was sending paintings to a church and a restaurant.

"There's no reason you shouldn't look at paintings while you eat, says Mrs. Elser, "and by exhibiting in church rooms we found that people who wanted to look at paintings became interested in church, and church people became interested in painting.

Allen's Idea

THE LAUNDRY show was the brain child of writer-painter William Allen.

"Laundry is my idea of an air-conditioned nightmare," he explained. "A cold, frigid atmosphere, depressing and full of open spaces. What could be better than to fill it with warmth and beauty—and give the men and women something to enjoy while waiting for the machines to do their sterilizing work?"

The other center officials went for it. Now Allen is looking for other likely spots—shoe stores, food stores and the like.

"The idea is to break down the belief that only the rich buy pictures; to build up the idea that art is something for everybody," says Allen. "Unfortunately, Americans have the habit of buying reproductions and of thinking that originals belong only in palaces and museums. They don't."

The Disenchanted Traveler

April's Glee to August's Gloom

By Blaine Stubblefield

RUSH CENTER, KANS.—Millions are toeing gas pedals again for a windshield view of America. Nearly all of them have twice too much luggage and half enough money.

From TVA lakes to Puget Sound they're going 70, keeping books on mileage, mailing doorkeys back to mo or ho-tels, and two-for-a-nickel cards to folks at home in the heat wave.

No tourist ever is half as blithe and fancy free as he had planned to be while marking the guide maps last April.

You can almost tell by the anxious face whether the engine is throwing oil, or an eviction notice has been forwarded, or it rained all week at Passamaquoddy. If the tourist is scratching, he has merely picked up chiggers while roughing it three miles off Route 40.

Balance Helps

AUTO VACATIONERS don't know they've been happy till they get back home and raise a new balance in the bank. Then they tell each other nostalgically about the night in August they shivered at Laramie, Wyo.,

"You never see the price of admission to a museum till you get right to the ticket window" and what the New Yorker said when he saw a field of rye.

All tourists know they are going to get rimmed but what else is there for dudes to do? They love to pay $1.50 plus tax for admission to the phony "museum" and come out cussing. The last museum that fetched me was an old hayshed full of arrow heads, pack saddles and one pirogue, all pertaining deviously to Chief Joseph of the Nez Perce. (A pirogue is a canoe hewn out of a log.)

You never see the price of admission to a museum till you get right to the ticket window. Having gone so far, you are too proud to turn back. But I did, five days ago, at the box office of an "ancient buried city." I simply said it was too much.

You can get humorously gypped on snake farms, two-headed calves, bat caves, balanced rocks, Indian burial grounds, and licenses to fish in streams that have no fish in them. Or you can get a license to hunt out of season. That way they get you twice.

Try the Hotels

THERE'S NOTHING much you can do about the $8 rate at the shaggy motel. It has 25-watt bulbs, and a sheet-steel shower stall that booms like a bass drum. But it's getting dark, so you stay. All tourists resolve to stop early in the afternoon and take their pick, but they never do.

Well, yes, you can beat the motels, with the hotels. Not the big downtown Palaces and Ambassadors, but the doormanless places on side streets. Many of them are very good but deserted, and glad to see you at two or three bucks.

There was a time when every Western town had a tourist camp, where for 50 cents you pitched your own tent and blackened your own skillet on an open fire. Then came tourist cottages in green field and grove. Many of them remain in the East. But out West you find the motel has moved into the suburbs with graveled courtyard, thin partitions, radios, dogs, and gab, quiet from 1 to 5 a. m.

Can't Back 'Em

IN RECENT years thousands of summer travelers have tried trailers, with high hope in a home on wheels. But their radiators boiled and their hitches jerked. Only a few professors of differential calculus ever learned to back up a trailer. Worse, all trailer camps are bedlam, and there is no place to go. The farmers missed a bet in not setting up facilities for these land schooners. Now you can drive all day and see only two or three, each followed by a caravan of cursing speed hounds who can't pass.

The windshield view of America is changing. Thousands of aluminum-sheeted buildings gleam modernistically on plain and mountain. Even sawmils are shedded in bright metal.

Where once only telephone wires hummed lonesomely along the road, now high-tension power lines stretch away over the hills. The lofty towers of TVA reach a third of the way across the Nation.

There are fewer and fewer old locomotives huff-puffing black smoke on the horizon, and more deep-throated diesels, in teams of two or three, hauling trains.

Windmills Fadings

WIND-ELECTRIC generators, spinning like airplane propellers on high towers, are disappearing as rural electrification moves outward in windy Kansas and Colorado. Families are thrilling to electric washers and iceboxes in many far places, and dealers are counting profits.

Windsocks on low sheds mark cow-pasture airports all over the land. Plains farmers can land anywhere. The family plane tied down in a meadow is a common sight.

Familiar old towns, like Reno and Elko, have grown into cities. Oak Ridge, Tenn., grew out of the Cumberland Mountains. The winding oil-and-gravel road is no more, and cars shriek along four-lane highways, even in regions that can't afford them. You can find no lonely spot but an airliner will snore over your head, a few hours out of Yakima, Nashville, or Buffalo.

Probably the greatest sight-seers' thrill in America is Lake Louise, B. C., or maybe one of the three canyons: Hell, Bryce or Grand. But a close draw is the 5-cent sunripe cantaloupe in Kentucky, and 22-cent gasoline in Missouri and Kansas.

Some Don't Change

BUT there are things like the Medes and Persians that never change. One is the all-American greasy spoon. The only way a tourist may get a good meal is to cook it, or try a sweaty drive downtown. I wish that a certain gourmet who recommends the right places had to eat in all of them.

Then you have highway traffic still fighting the main streets of all towns and cities. Having forced you into bottlenecks, too many offer you insolent threats: 'Law strictly enforced.' 'Police will haul your car away.'

I estimate there are five million railroad crossings in the United States, but have found only three that don't bounce you up and down on your snubbers. Another thing hard to understand is why the engineers build all the rough roads in town. Why do so few towns give notice of their own names? Why do nine out of ten State parks have dirty wash rooms and strewn garbage? Or why don't the States get together and agree on traffic signs and rules?

Swiss Hoping for Record Influx of Americans

ZURICH (By Airmail).—Switzerland expects before the summer is ended to boast of a record influx of Americans—an invasion which may stave off a serious crisis in the Swiss tourist industry.

Last summer was poor, and the winter no better, because the customers—particularly the British—were allowed little or no foreign exchange for holidays abroad. Political tension in Europe then also kept many Americans away.

Plans were, therefore, being pushed energetically for a summer season "boom." The full resources of the Swiss National Tourist Office and the Federal Government were mobilized in an effort to overcome the many difficulties of a highly sensitive industry in the midst of austerity-minded Europe.

Sent Envoy

TO DETERMINE first-hand what is needed to get Americans in worthwhile numbers visiting Switzerland, and to study the particular wishes of American tourists abroad, the Swiss National Tourist Office sent one of its executives on a three-months tour of the United States this year.

Visiting 30 cities, talking with travel agents, hoteliers, shipping, airline and United States Government officials in Washington, he returned home this month with plenty of "know how," and accordingly advised all sections of the Swiss tourist industry on how to cater to Americans.

There are many reasons why the Swiss need more Americans this year. To most Europeans, Switzerland is too expensive. But when comparisons are made with hotels in some typical tourist centers, rather than with home costs of living, it is not so expensive for Americans.

First-class hotels in Switzerland offer luxurious quarters in an incomparable setting and three staggering meals for $10 to $12 a day. Similar full pension rates from $7 to $9 a day can be found throughout the country at the many hotels just below palace category.

Once he is in Switzerland, the tourist will be impressed greatly by the many natural and historic wonders that are so readily available, so compact. Back home we think we have many points of interest, but the things we publicize most are hundreds of miles apart. Here the tourist can reach almost any variety and amount of eye appeal he wants in a matter of few hours travel.

Cost of Transport

THE DIFFICULTIES the Swiss see about increasing American tourism to Switzerland, of course, are mainly the distance and cost of getting here.

The airlines are active, however, and they rely on a great increase in the number of Americans who will want to spend their summer vacations in Switzerland this year. Additional services are being opened every month, recently supplemented by the inauguration of biweekly services—operated by TWA and "Swissair"—from New York to Zurich, which saves nearly a day in getting to the playgrounds of the Grisons, Lake Lucerne district, and the Bernese Oberland.

With five flights weekly passing through Geneva, it is now a fact that Switzerland is very little farther in time from America's East Coast than are the Far Western mountain resorts.

Off-Season Good

THRIFTY travelers would do well to realize that the off-season, August 15 through mid-December—offers many advantages in Switzerland both in overall reductions for transportation and hotels. This period also assures tourists a wider choice of hotel accommodation and more individual service.

Nor do the Swiss themselves want their country regarded only as a target for tourists. They are anxious to see American businessmen come to Switzerland in greater numbers.

Secret Corps of Students Live Again in Germany

By Fred M. Hechinger

MARBURG (via Airmail).—The semisecret and violently nationalistic university "fraternities," which were instrumental in the defeat of German prewar democracy, are operating both openly and under cover at this traditional university again. An open secret to the town's population and the university faculty, the return of the student "corporations" is known to be a direct academic and political threat to the democratic forces here.

Although the "corporations" at present have recruited as "active" members, only about one-sixth of the student body of 3000, it is known that approximately 50 per cent are "on the side" of the exclusive organizations. Out of the 15 members of the student council (ASTA), nine are definitely fraternity members. Of the remaining six, at least three are "collaborators."

Since ASTA participates in the selection of freshmen and is responsible for much of the student's personal and "household" problems, the "corporate domination" is out of proportion to its representative strength. An antifraternity student compared the methods used to those of Communist domination over the rank and file of workers in some countries.

Not Like U. S. Fraternities

IT MUST BE understood that the "corporations" are in no way comparable to the American fraternities. They were known for their dueling and secret political and drinking sessions, complete with "colors" and uniforms. They stood in the forefront of the nationalistic fight in the short-lived Weimar republic. Socially, politically and economically they were highly exclusive and dominated by the "Old Gentlemen," the alumni members of the faculty and the professions. Their members were frequently pushed into leading legal and governmental positions by the tightly controlled clique which became one of the main stumbling blocks to the growth of democracy. The dueling slogan "Blood and Honor" later was also engraved on Nazi sabers, although the fraternities were discontinued by Hitler as too "exclusive."

At least eight of the old clubs are functioning again full force. Most of them are using cover names for public and "Military Government" purposes, but are known to operate under their old national names in private.

As an example, I was able to establish that the "Teutonen" are now hiding under the harmless title of "Academic Club." The "Nibelungen" came out of the wash as "Scientific Society." There are others with similar cover designations. At meetings, guards are posted and special passes required.

At a recent all-student celebration in Marburg the "corporations" took part so openly that city police officials began to regard their activities with some misgivings. Forbidden "colors" were at first worn under jackets, but later displayed ostentatiously. One group of marching students sang the nationalistic hymn of the local mountain regiment. In at least two secret meetings police officers reported that the Nazi Horst Wessel hymn was sung.

Many of the organizations are national rather than local, and their influence is by no means confined to Marburg. In at least one other university, whose name must be withheld at this time, membership is held by more than one third of the student body.

As this decisive battle is fought, democratic students and professors feel that much of Germany's educational, political and national future is in the balance.

Whistle Stopping

The Welcome Mat Is Out.

By Orval Hopkins

THE SAD thing about the returning vacationer is that, though to him the holiday has seemed a sort of minor league eternity, actually only his immediate family knows he has been away.

I tripped, all glowing and smiles, into the office on my return and was greeted by damp glances of recognition. Miss Skillet, the food editor, said, "Say, your phone rang." I turned, still beaming, to Natalie Cladd, the fashion lady. "That tie," she sneered, "is ugly." Mr. Phylit, the boss of our library, eyed my rich tan and said, "Fnf. You better get out in the sun, Buck. You look like something that's dead." Miss Gadsir, one of the society reporters, happened by and clipped, "You, ah—been away?" Miss Gavel, the club editor, didn't greet me at all. George Jean Coe, the drama man, sincerely remarked, "Frankly, I'm sorry to see you back."

Seriously, as the funny men say, we had a wonderful time at Rehoboth. The weather was delightful and the beach a pleasure. We went to the Pines Room of the Hotel Henlopen and enjoyed a couple of beers and some bad jokes. We went to dinner at the Corner Cupboard Inn which, as I keep saying, puts out the best meal in town for two bucks. I took a snapshot of my wife and it turned out so well I couldn't get her into the water for one entire day. A piece of mine was reprinted without comment in the Rehoboth Public Press. This may mean something complimentary. We had a roomy cottage in a bosky grove, which ain't a bad redundancy if I say so myself. There were none of the so-called French bathing suits at Deauville Beach, where we sunned happily for endless hours. But there was one of those boy-is-she-built girls down there. I leered at her at a distance for some days, calling her "the body," until my wife instructed me to cease. We returned, brown and snappish, of a Sunday afternoon and had a lovely time that evening at the Meridian Hill Park theater, a locale second in evening beauty only to Mr. Griffith's green ball yard.

End holiday.

BRANIFF INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS deposes amazingly as follows: "Now you can drive out to the airport some Saturday morning in your fishing rig, check yourself and tackle in on a Colorado-bound Braniff plane, step in a waiting car at the Denver airport, drive to a trout-laden stream, haul in the fish until Sunday noon, call Braniff to pick up and freeze the fish to accompany you home, and fly back for a Sunday night snack with the family." Can you beat it?

WILLIAMSBURG publicist Kershaw Burbank, re an item in this space, writes in part thusly: "Your assumption that 'enlisted personnel' means people enlisted in the military of our Nation is quite correct. (By the way, enlisted personnel do not have to be in uniform just so long as they show their ID cards.) You were wrong in your guess that we 'just don't want' children under 7 around. In fact we love to have them around to such an extent that they are admitted free. As a father of two children under 7 and the owner of a Great Dane, I can authoritatively state that Williamsburg welcomes children and dogs."

JOYCE MORROW, the Philadelphia lassie who keeps nagging me about Split Rock Lodge, sends me a picture of some very collected-looking people grinning at each other inside a cabin, and a note mentioning the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Co. in the same sigh with Split Rock Lodge. I'm only too happy to be cooperative about LC & N, Miss Morrow, not to mention good old SRL, but what do I do with this? There was a story you were going to attach but didn't, perhaps? Tsk, Miss M. And another thing. What's happened to the Athletics? I never saw such a tailspin. You got anything to do with that?

I KEEP getting mysterious missives from Alaska. The latest one addresses me as "Oral." (Why couldn't I have been named George, Mama?) Anyway, they appear to have been sent by a man named Walter W. Smith, advertising manager of the Juneau Daily Alaska Empire. He wants me to go to Alaska, and I bet he ain't the only one.

Fontana Nears Capacity After Rains

Fontana Dam, N. C.—The huge dam here is spilling over spectacularly. Filled with water from recent rains, the lake reached within 15 inches of its capacity when one of the four sluices was opened.

The sluice, a tunnel 15 feet in diameter, conveys the water down the dam for 500 feet, deflects it against a cement backboard, and sprays it gently into the Little Tennessee River, a sight any traveler would like to see. Coming down the tunnel, the water travels at 140 miles an hour.

Care for the Dog

Experts on Arctic travel say that the successful explorer should be equal to walking as far in a day as his dogs can pull the sledge and camp equipment, notes the National Geographic Society. Even when rations are short for both man and animal, the practical advice is not to skimp on food for the dog team, since weakness in the dogs will only result in slowing all in progress of the expedition toward the safety of a settlement.

First Yacht Race

The first world's championship yachting race was sailed August 22, 1851, around the Isle of Wight and was won by the New York Yacht Club's entry, the America. The trophy, awarded by the Royal Yacht Squadron at Cowes ha since been known as the America's Cup. It has remained in American possession since the first race, despite repeated efforts of British contenders to regain it for Britain.

Totalizer Legalized in Holland

The Hague, Holland.—Recent legalization of the totalizer at Dutch race tracks is expected to stimulate interest in horse racing this year. Roulette may also be permitted. A Dutch syndicate, capitalized at about $400,000, has already been organized to operate roulette tables at Scheveningen and Zandvoort, fashionable resorts.

Pensive-looking Sandy, a 2-year-old girl orang-utan, lives in playpen at New York's Bronx Zoo.

Boy Meets Girl (Orang-utan)

OF ALL THE ANTHROPOID APES, the orang-utan is most similar to man in looks and behaviour. But Sandy, a two-year-old orang in New York's Bronx Zoo, seems to have carried this similarity a little too far.

Born in Borneo, Sandy was brought to the Bronx at an early age, fed on a formula and broken to diapers and zweiback. Now she eats fruit, cereal and cod liver oil, lives in a playpen and is allowed out occasionally to cavort with her keepers in much the manner of a highly uninhibited two-year-old girl.

Until recently, Sandy was permitted to romp with her swain, a lively young orang named Andy. But when Andy began to bang her pretty head on the floor of the nursery he was removed from the scene.

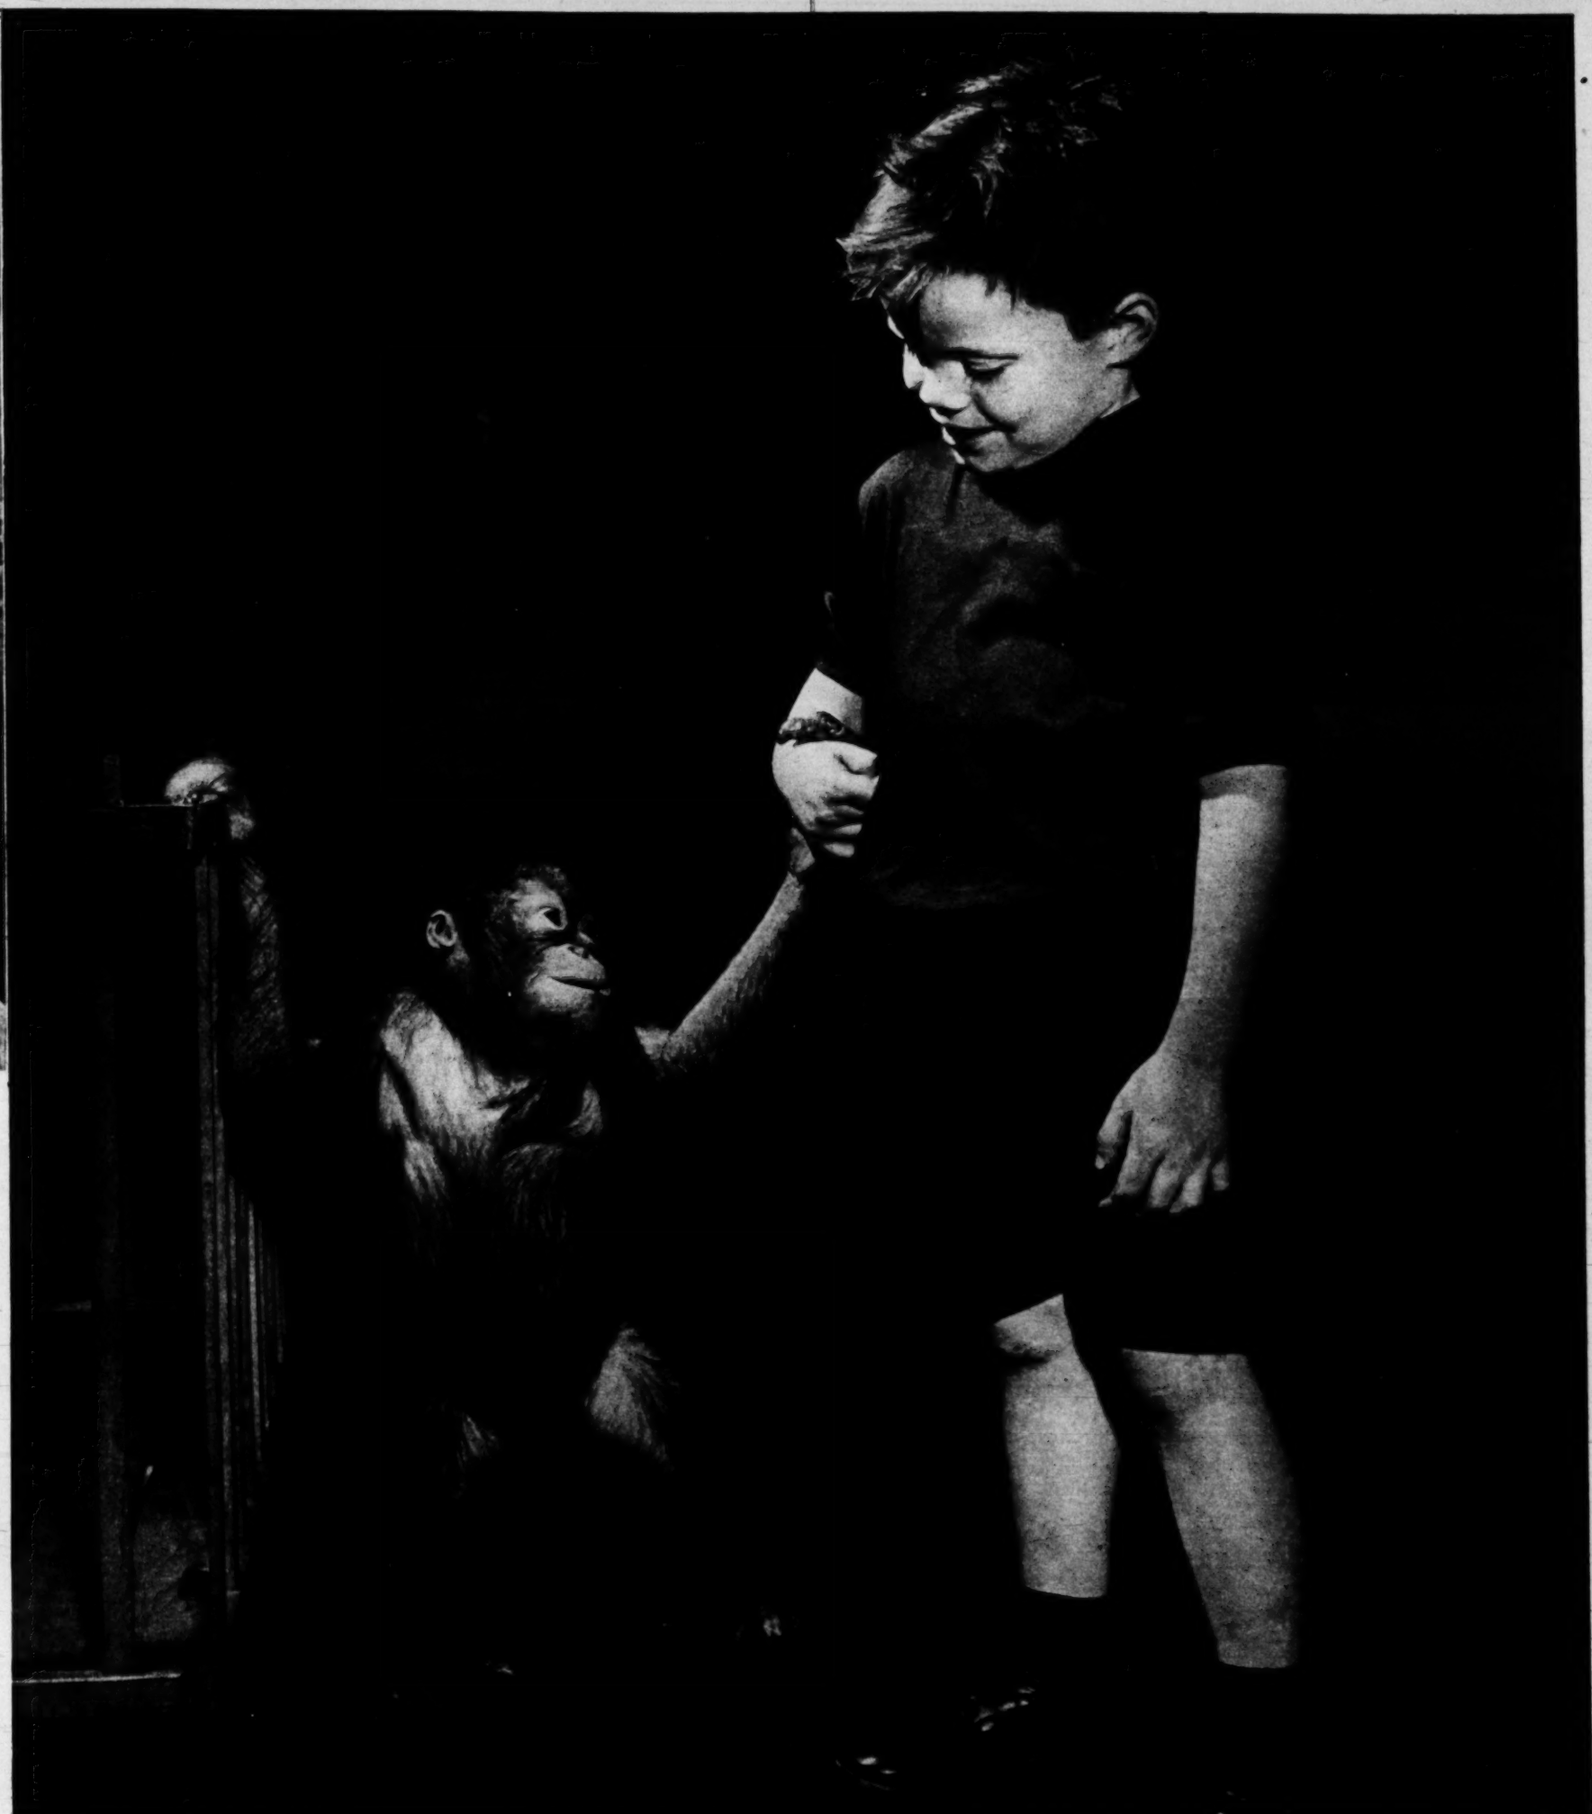
For days Sandy pouted alone. But on a recent Sunday she brightened. Julian Hayster, a five-year-old boy, had come to call. Their meeting was recorded on film by Ylla, PARADE's animal photographer, some of whose best friends are children and orangs. This is her report, in pictures.

Sunday visitor to Sandy's pen is Julian, 5 who just happened to drop in for chat.

Restless, tired of talking, Julian invites Sandy outside. But Sandy plays it coy.

Once outside pen, Sandy gets rough, nips friend on hand. Julian laughs it off.

Weird games they play look foolish to outsiders but make sense to Julian, Sandy.



Fast friends now, Sandy bids Julian a sad farewell, prepares to hop back into pen. Next year, she'll enter zoo's ape house, throw peanuts at Julian.

ON PARADE:

Not only in spring does man's fancy turn

Shakespeare said it: "I am the very pink of courtesy . . . Was ever woman in this humor won . . .

"A dish for the Gods . . . A morsel for a monarch. Her beauty makes this vault a feasting presence . . .

"Appetite's a universal wolf . . . Chewing food of sweet and bitter fancy, what a case am I in . . .

"Silence of pure innocence persuades when speaking fails. I'll let my eye negotiate for myself."

The Turning Point

HARTZELL SPENCE: a fire truck shaped his future . . .

WHEN HARTZELL SPENCE was nine, his father, the practical parson about whom Spence later wrote in "One Foot in Heaven," had a parish in Omaha, Neb.

In front of the Spence's house was a steep hill, which was roped off for coasting. Early one morning occurred the incident which Spence says turned him into a writer. Rain had coated the snow with ice, and young Hartzell was rushing pell-mell down the hill on his sled when a fire truck—a big hook-and-ladder—cut across at an intersection. Hartzell realized that to turn on the ice would throw him directly under the wheels, and that his only hope was to let the sled take the crash. He ducked his head, shielded his eyes with his arm, and waited. There was a roar, but no collision. At the bottom of the hill he learned he had gone between the front and rear wheels of the truck.

He rushed home, flushed and breathless, and told his father what had happened.

"I was coasting—and—and—I heard a fire engine," he panted. "I couldn't stop my sled, so I just hung on. Guess what happened—?"

The parson eyed his son with interest.

"What happened?" he asked quietly.

"—I just hung on, and my sled went under one side of the fire truck—right between the wheels—and came out the other."

THE TURNING POINT

The parson said nothing for a whole minute. Then:

"Hartzell," he spoke patiently, "your diction is good; your action is well timed; the suspense is excellent. It's a fine story. Now tell me what happened."

Ever since that day Hartzell Spence has been trying to make stories convincing. He's written three best sellers: "One Foot in Heaven," "Get Thee Behind Me," and "Vain Shadow." And next month his publisher, Whittlesey House, will put out his latest book, "Happily Ever After," a story of how he and his wife bought a farm.

THE COVER: Navy's new Skyrocket plane uses both rocket and jet power. In recent tests it has been flying on either or both. Designed to fly considerably closer to speed of sound than predecessors, the aircraft, Navy says, is the only one which has taken off, flown and returned under its own rocket power.

The Rescue

. . . or, What the Firemen Didn't Know

THE FIRE was a four-alarmer. The lumber yard, in Brooklyn, N. Y., was a pillar of fire—when someone remembered the three pups who'd been living in an unused lumber bin. Someone passed the word to the firemen.

Two pups were dead. But by a miracle the grinning firemen dug out a furry little survivor shown in the photograph. They gave it to a man.

What the firemen never knew was that four days after the fire, a big shepherd dog came pawing among the ruins vainly seeking three pups that she'd lost.

New hormone ACTH (see text) so improved Walter Swanson of Chicago, semi-crippled by arthritis for 10 years, that he's ready to throw his cane away. Eleven days after treatment began he could walk without pain.

ARTHRITIS: NEW HOPE

It's still a baffling problem, but the outlook's brighter

By LAWRENCE GALTON

SEVEN AND A HALF MILLION arthritic Americans got one of the biggest thrills of their lives one day last spring. From the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., had come news of a compound—nothing short of miraculous—that had relieved 14 patients of pain and swelling in a few days. Some who previously could hardly walk were now actually able to run.

Not only the public, but even conservative medical men are excited by the possibilities of Compound E, or, as it has been renamed, Cortisone.

But many medical men are worried, too. Will Cortisone help your arthritis? It may when it becomes widely available—perhaps in 18 months. It may—

(1) If you have the right kind of arthritis. (Cortisone is being used for rheumatoid arthritis but not for osteoarthritis.)

(2) If further tests prove it does no harm when taken over the long periods necessary.

(3) If your arthritis has not been permitted to advance to the point where damage is irreparable.

These are big "ifs" about a disease which, although it is the world's greatest crippler and man's oldest known affliction, is also one of the least understood, and most neglected and mistreated.

All told, fewer than half of all arthritics make use of proper medical care. Not long ago, an agonized man tore into a hospital with his body covered with bee stings, begging for relief, explaining in bitter disillusionment, that he had been told that bee venom cures arthritis.

It was fantastic, yet countless arthritics today swallow nasty concoctions, bathe in bizarre juices, salts and what-not, have teeth pulled, buy "secret" machines or go in for assorted hocus-pocus. Others adopt fatalistic, hopeless attitudes.

But even prior to Cortisone, qualified doctors could honestly say to arthritics that cures were possible, that pain could be avoided or relieved, and that there were overwhelmingly favorable chances for long and useful life.

For years, the prime aim of treatment was to avoid crippling, to prevent the locking up of leg and arm joints and the freezing of the spine. Yet 147,000 arthritics now are completely disabled, another 800,000 partly invalided — many of them because of neglect and quackery. But today the tragedy can be even worse. Ironically enough, there's danger that, because of misunderstanding, the bright hope of Cortisone may lead to still more crippling.

THE TWO KINDS OF ARTHRITIS

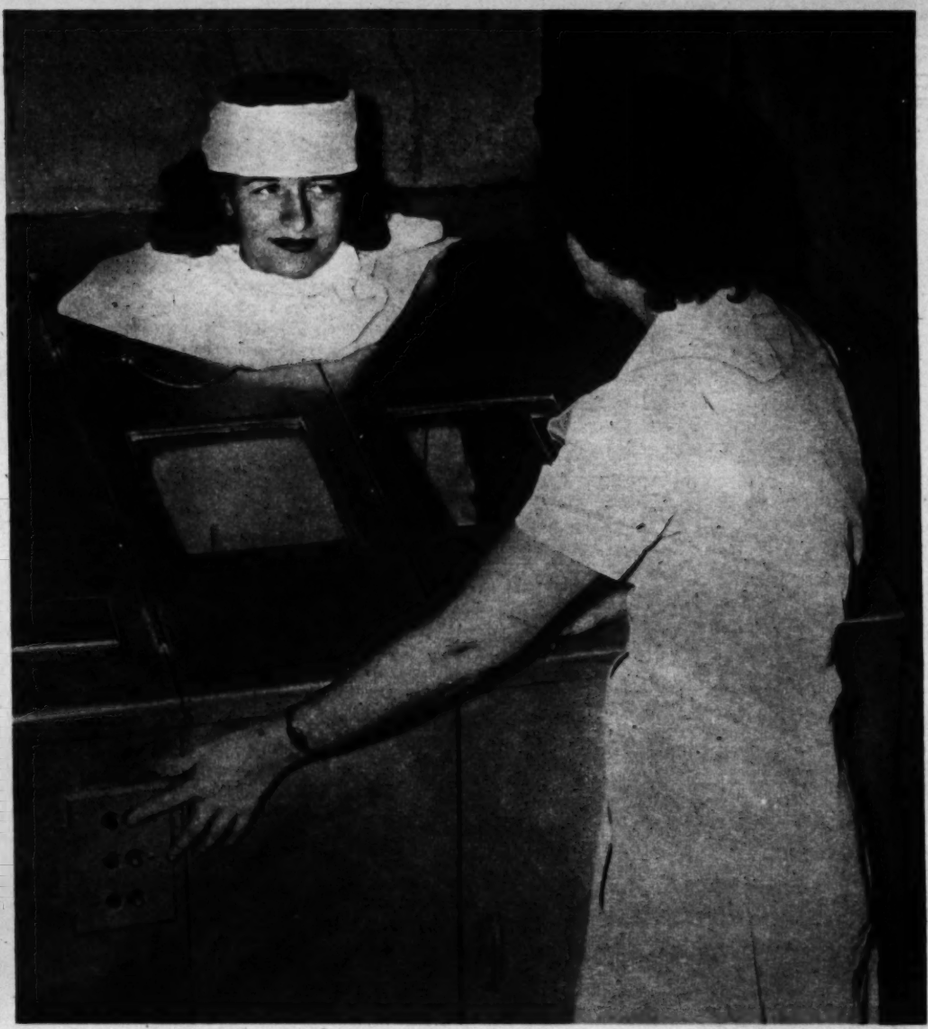
It's important to realize that there are two main types of arthritis. One is the rheumatoid kind in which Cortisone has produced such dramatic results. But the other, for which there is no present hope of specific cure, is osteoarthritis. The latter is the most common, affecting in some degree 97% of all who live beyond middle life.

A slight soreness or stiffness, aggravated by exercise, in fingertips, knees, hips, shoulders or vertebrae is usually osteoarthritis' first warning. Then, the joints become increasingly uncomfortable. Subsequently, the joints thicken and creak on movement, later they become painful.

Half the people with osteoarthritis are ten or more pounds overweight. And, as one specialist puts it bluntly, in many years of treating hundreds of victims, he has never once found an osteoarthritic who didn't need to be taught to walk without slump and sag. Another, pointing out that many more women than men have trouble, attributes it to high heels.

Arthritis patient in therapeutic pool at New York's Hospital for Special Surgery gets massage treatment from physiotherapist.

An outpatient at an arthritis clinic gets examination for involvement of the knuckle joints, one of the symptoms of osteoarthritis.



Heat therapy produces favorable results for many sufferers. Here a patient is being treated in a "cabinet bath" which relieves some of the symptoms. Seven and a half million Americans have arthritis.

If you have osteoarthritis, waiting for Cortisone will do no good—weight reduction and posture improvement will. Proper fitting shoes, a plaster cast, splints or a corset may help depending upon the case. Heat, massage, warm baths, rest, relaxation and sunshine are also needed.

Under proper medical treatment, if begun early enough before the joints have been severely damaged, there is great likelihood of relief and improvement.

Rheumatoid arthritis is something else again. Most common among young adults, especially women, it starts usually before 40. Generally, there's a period of ill health in which the victim feels below par, is easily fatigued, and susceptible to colds.

The arthritis may start with inflammation of several joints—gradually without high temperature or suddenly with low fever. Smaller joints like those in fingers and feet are affected first; later, larger joints become involved.

Slight joint pain and swellings may appear and disappear for years and that's misleading. Finally, the joints stiffen, swell and become painful. Also, there may be anemia, mental depression, digestive disturbances, loss of weight and energy.

There are many theories but no definite knowledge of what causes rheumatoid arthritis. For years, however, doctors noted that when an arthritic woman became pregnant, she showed marked improvement. Similarly, among other victims who became jaundiced, the arthritis was remedied.

It was these two observations that, gave Dr. Philip Hench and Dr. E. C. Kendall of Mayo Clinic the clue to Cortisone. For the common factor in both was held to be a change in functioning of the adrenal gland, which secretes many hormones. Perhaps rheumatoid arthritis resulted when it failed to secrete, or secrete enough of, one hormone.

For nine years, Hench and Kendall tested the effect of various adrenal hormones. Finally, Cortisone turned in a dramatic performance.

By now, you know of the 34-year-old man who couldn't raise arms above shoulders yet four days after getting Cortisone injections easily did that; of the doctor with joints so painful he couldn't stand their being touched and who, after a few treatments, improved so that he could dance a jig.

Besides Cortisone, Mayo doctors have tried out on a small number of patients another hormone called ACTH (adreno-cortico-tropic hormone). Results have been encouraging. ACTH comes from the pituitary gland, evidently acts on the adrenal gland.

PROBLEMS TO BE OVERCOME

Both Cortisone and ACTH are scarce. The former comes from an acid obtained from ox bile and takes 65 pounds of bile to produce half a pound of acid. ACTH comes from the pituitary glands of hogs and takes a thousand 200-pound hogs to yield one pound of pituitary gland which, in turn, gives only a small fraction of ACTH. It will be at least 18 months before the compounds are available in sufficient quantity and at low cost.

Both have to be used regularly just as insulin is used in diabetes. Tests are now under way to determine what harmful effects may be caused by such continued use. It's known that women who undergo the treatment get rounded faces with a slight increase in hair growth, gain as much as four pounds in 24 hours. Many methods for treating rheumatoid arthritis have been tried and discarded as useless. But injections of gold salts improve 50% of the victims, work best when begun early.

Previous drawbacks to gold injections are being overcome. Some patients developed skin rashes and blood and kidney trouble. Lessened dosage has reduced this possibility. Moreover, a war chemical, BAL, has proved an effective antidote to gold toxity.

When gold treatments are stopped, most patients relapse but do maintain some improvement. But a new schedule of treatment has helped here, too.

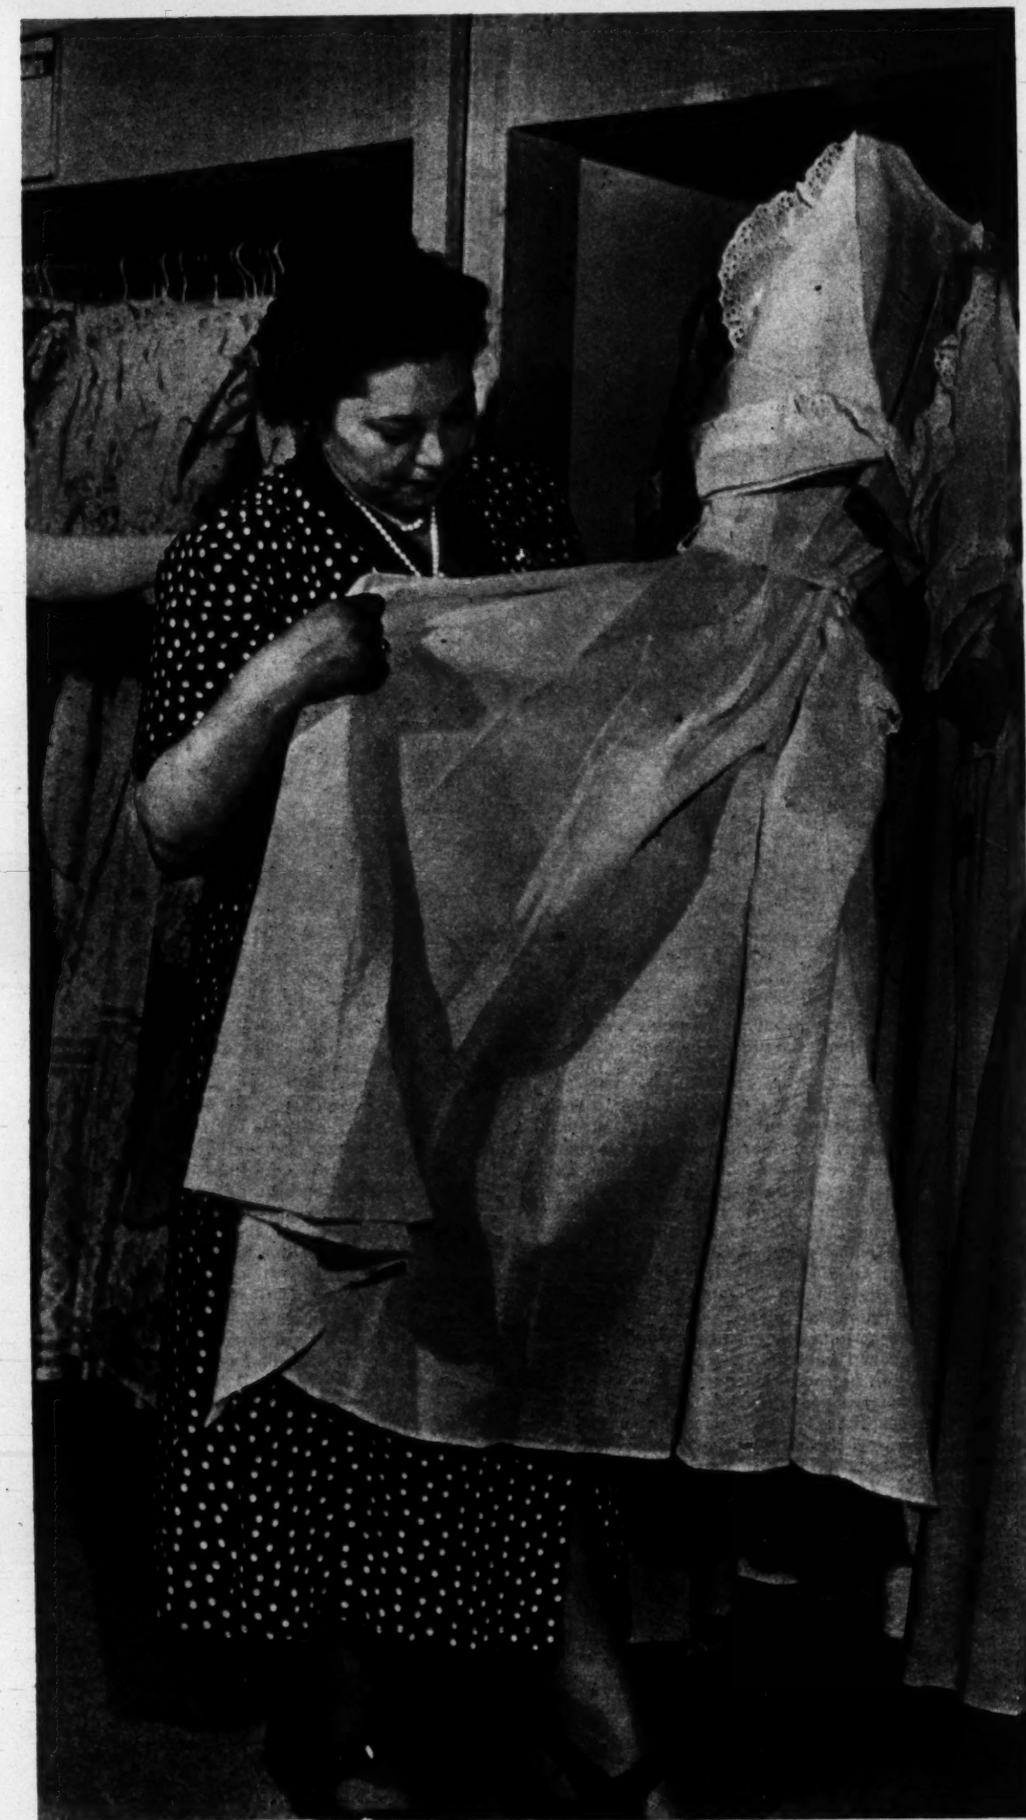
Doctors have observed that many patients who expect to get better have increased chances of doing so. They have noted that emotions may play an important part in bringing on arthritis.

According to Dr. Edward Weiss, psychosomatic authority, emotional disturbance involved in arthritis is "smoldering resentment" of which the patient realizes nothing. "When a child resents but also loves a parent," he declares, "or when a wife feels love but also resentment toward her husband, there exists a tension which often cannot be expressed by word or deed." Expression is found in arthritis.

Actually, the power of Cortisone and ACTH is believed by many doctors to offer added evidence of the connection between emotions and arthritis.

Thirty years ago, famed doctor Sir William Osler shook his head: "When a patient with arthritis comes to me," he said, "I feel like jumping out a window."

But that attitude no longer applies. Today, a doctor who has kept up with recent advances can offer relief, can head off crippling injury, and can even achieve a surprising degree of rehabilitation.



Typical shopper Mrs. Betty Cardiman, of Coraopolis, Pa., shrewdly fingers dress in Pittsburgh store.

A Report on Shopping

A housewife finds prices are still too high...

By ERNEST LA FRANCE and SID ROSS

ALL THROUGH SPRING and the early summer, something had been happening in the corner stores. As thermometers climbed up, up, up, retail prices were sliding down, down, down. By the dog-days of mid-August, the war-born seller's market of scarcity and high prices was definitely going, and in some fields it was gone. Once more shelves were well-stocked, a few prices were back to normal, and those sure-fire signs of normal times, competition and courtesy, were reappearing rapidly.

The long-suffering American housewife, crux and arbiter of the whole market, was coming into her own. For the first time since Pearl Harbor, she was discovering what it is like to have a store clerk woo her trade for a few cents worth of chopped meat, a few yards of dress goods, half a watermelon, or an installment-plan icebox. Auto salesmen wanted to take her for a trial spin, and butchers were avid to sell her her weight in T-bone steaks.

But in most cities, Mrs. Housewife was proving a tough customer.

Why? To find out, PARADE interviewed a typical housewife, Mrs. Betty Natala Cardiman, of the town of Coraopolis, Pa., 12 miles from Pittsburgh.

WHAT'S BACK OF BUYING CAUTION?

As wife of steelworker Bill Cardiman, mother of 12-year-old Joanne and 17-year-old Tony Cardiman (all possessed of hearty appetites and hard on their clothes), and as co-owner of a house and a 1939 car (both in need of repairs and eventual replacement), she is a potential buyer of everything from more food, furniture and clothing to a television set, a new house, and a later model family jalopy.

In a spending mood, and multiplied by as many millions as there are housewives in America, she could absorb the main output of every factory in the land making consumer goods.

But this summer, strangely slow to buy, the average housewife has slowed the spindles in textile mills, the moving belts of mass-production lines, the wheels of southern cotton gins, Hollywood studios, New York garment factories, and luxury industries. Yet her need for what they produce is great—if not greater than it has ever been. And her desire to have their products, especially the new models and new materials, not only matches but exceeds her need.

Why the housewife typified by Mrs. Cardiman is not rushing to buy more may be of greater importance right now than any other domestic problem. Her buying caution, which started when prices hit the heights after the war, was first called "buyer resistance." There are indications now that she is simply in a waiting line—waiting to spend her money when more prices get back to the levels that she knew before the sky-rocketing began. For when special values are offered, she is there in large numbers to buy.

But it's more than prices, too, that she's waiting for, although she may not know it. She's waiting for a return of salesmanship. (While she waits, many manufacturers, aware of the need, are initiating special classes to train men in selling-fundamentals forgotten during the war. The National Sales Executives and their local clubs are aggressively sponsoring drives for better selling in many cities. Salesmen are seeking to discover their own mistakes. In some communities, improved sales have been reported.)

Cardiman family, consisting of 12-year old Joanne, 17-year old Tony, Mrs. Cardiman, and husband Bill, eat food carefully bought, after a close scrutiny of prices in stores. Food costs $25 a week.

Movies, shopped for as carefully as anything else, find Mrs. Cardiman comparing price for value.

Music career for son Tony, Mrs. Cardiman's pet hope, takes $2 a week from budget. It's a "must."

Saving money, Cardimans go 4 miles down road to buy eggs at chicken farm of C. Vogel, who sells them for 60¢ a dozen. Family eats four dozen a week. Eighty cents saved goes for other foods.

Shopping Continued

Shopping at neighborhood 5th Ave. Market, Mrs. Cardiman insisted on hand-picking her own oranges, finally bought a dozen for 35¢. Says clerk Ben Rubin: "The customers are more picky than during the war. When they want good solid tomatoes or nice bananas, you better give it to them. They don't wait around today."

Smart salesmanship is

UP AGAINST AN ARMY of Mrs. Cardimans, the nation's salesmen, storekeepers, ad writers, and Chambers of Commerce are meeting the most serious challenge in a decade. Today it takes the "old college try" behind the counter — in a measure almost forgotten since the backslapping days of the '20s, when the word "SERVICE" was the businessman's pet motto.

Pleasant-mannered, but stony-faced when shopping, Mrs. Cardiman is no tougher a customer than the average. She is out to get what she wants without spending more money than absolutely necessary. "When I go to a store these days," she says firmly, "I make up my mind what I want to pay, and that's it!" If she can't find it one place, she tries another, follows the newspaper ads—and waits. She figures time is on her side.

"Take my console radio-phonograph," she points out. "It originally sold for $298. Then television came along and the lady in the store wanted $150 for it, but I told her I'd give her only $100. I finally got it."

That's the way she got an extra pair of sandals. "The way it works out," she says, "I go out and get a pair of shoes once a year. My last pair was bought during Christmas week last winter, and I didn't expect any until next winter. Then, shopping around for a housecoat, I found one for $8.75. That was too high. So I went to Pittsburgh and found the same thing in a basement for $5.75. With the difference, I got the sandals. I just wait. I'm

Round steak at 79¢ per lb. at Tony Barnaba's store got careful scrutiny. "Everybody knows that stuff is too high," says Barnaba. "Today the customer can find everything, everyplace. You're telling me they watch pennies! You can't get mad or they go someplace else."

Mrs. Cardiman "looked" for jeans for daughter at Joe Workman's Dept. Store in Coraopolis, found some for $1.69. Manager, from experience, confesses, "We definitely have to give customers attention and courtesy. During the war it was different. Today we have to sell."

Gas bill at Manufacturers Light & Heat Co. runs between $1.60 and $1.80 a month. H. R. Shiffler, Chief Clerk at Coraopolis says, "Our rates are about the only thing that hasn't increased since the war. On accessories people seem to be holding out for lower prices."

Mrs. Antonia Fabec, of Fabec Bros. store, showed $11.50 electric iron to Mrs. Cardiman but got no sale. "There's too much buyer resistance, but people want things. You have to talk more than during the war. And we let them feel welcome to return things they buy."

Window shopping, housewife's favorite pastime, keeps Mrs. Cardiman well-informed on prices of everything from bathing suits to fur coats. She makes mental notes of prices all over Pittsburgh area, often travels miles to get what she needs at the price she wants to pay.

Salesman Thomas S. Byrne, of Spear & Co., Pittsburgh, urged Cardimans to take advantage of present prices, says: "I judge customers and usually 'visit' with them awhile. The times have made shoppers more demanding. They know what they want and expect good service."

needed to bring back business in 1949...

in no hurry. If I see a thing at a good price, I buy."

What she wants to buy "when the price is right" sounds like a storekeeper's dream. "I need so much stuff, I could recite it for a week," she says, starting to recite as if in a trance. "Sheets, pillow cases, linens, a new tank in the cellar. I want new rugs in the living room and in the bedroom upstairs. (The rug now in the living room cost $35 eight years ago and is getting thin.) I could use a new dining room set and a new bathroom sink. I could spend a couple of thousand dollars without even thinking."

The six room Cardiman house needs paint and new lumber to shore up the porches. The garage has a sagging door. The battered 1939 car needs seat covers, ignition points, paint, and sundry other repairs and improvements. She may soon need a new car.

At present, Mrs. Cardiman is concentrating on finding items immediately necessary. The 11-year old electric iron needs replacement. Bill needs three pairs of shoes a year, which he buys all at once. He got his last suit two years ago and needs a new one, plus a fairly constant supply of pants, work shirts, and sports shirts for off-job wear. Teen-age Joanne and Tony wear out shoes, blue jeans, skirts, overalls, pants, jackets, and sweaters as fast, if not faster, than other teen-agers.

Mrs. Cardiman replaces everything by shopping around, reading all the labels, and feeling the goods. Her own regular dresses, bought two or three at a time, run about $7 to $8; housedresses about $3. Most of them are bought at sales.

SHE KNOWS THE MERCHANT'S PROBLEM

Many of her purchases of "big" items are made on budget accounts or on straight time payments. Her semi-automatic washer was bought on the installment plan two years ago. Her $79 coat was also bought in Pittsburgh on the installment plan.

She has a shrewd psychological grasp of the storekeepers' plight. "Lots of times I will start walking out if the price is too high," she confides. "And then the storekeeper will call me back."

Unless things look up considerably in the future, Mrs. Cardiman is going to be even harder to sell than in the past. Like most Americans, the family income rose and fell with the war, and the Cardimans have been through enough to be wary of spending money. Soon after 17-year old Tony was born, Bill Cardiman's job at the Pittsburgh Forgings Co. went on a 1 or 2 day a week basis, and he eventually went on relief and WPA. Beginning in 1936, he went back to full pay and made $50 a week. During the war, with overtime and "incentive pay," it frequently soared to $80. On April 1st, 1949, he went back to 4 days a week, and had a mid-summer average of between $42 and $45 take-home pay.

The Cardiman standard of living, high during the war and high now, has frozen the Cardiman budget to fixed items that leave little for careless spending. Mortgage on the house, bought in 1942, costs $40 a month. Food averages $25 a week. Their 8 tons of coal a year cost $10 to $11 a ton. Water and electricity cost between $3.50 and $4 a month; the phone between $4 and $5; insurance premiums on Mrs. Cardiman and the children $6.70 to $7. With good credit, they can put off paying the food bills for a few weeks if Mrs. Cardiman finds a bargain. "Most of the salespeople try to persuade me to buy things," she says, "but if I don't want them, that's it, and I walk out. I don't let them give me a hard time." The great American Salesman will have to figure how to keep her from walking out. Salesmanship is today's need.

Slow lampreys (clinging to bulkhead) have found that they, too, can hurdle Columbia river barriers by working their way around them with their suckers.

COLUMBIA EXPRESS!

Flashy salmon, bound upstream, overtakes an upbound school of lampreys on wall

ONE OF THE SIGHTS that draws visitors to Bonneville Dam, Oregon, is the flash of great salmon hurdling "fish ladders" on their way up the Columbia River. In the photograph above, a splendid silver salmon after a dash to gain speed underneath the water is shown in the midst of his leap over a little barrier. The latter is merely one rung in the "ladders" built to help fish get upstream around great Bonneville dam that impounds Bonneville Lake.

But in their excitement over the salmon, tourists often miss seeing the lampreys—strange eel-like fish which get around dams and waterfalls by clinging to rocks, or anything else bordering the stream, and working their way upward to less turbulent water. They're slow and sluggish, don't move as fast as the salmon—but eventually they get there, too.

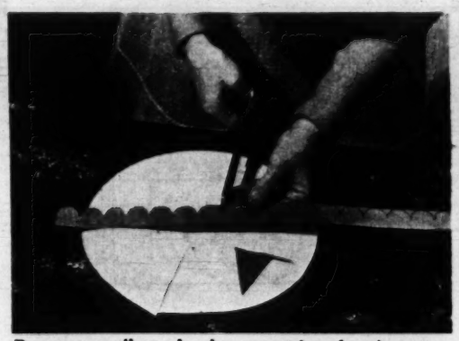
A circus party for small fry(and will they love it!): a cake that looks like the Big Top itself, served with ice cream and orange juice.

BIG TOP CAKE

IF YOU WANT TO BE the most popular mother or Lady Bountiful in your own neighborhood, give a Circus Party for the children. It's easy to do, especially if you use a cake mix and serve pre-packaged ice cream. The kids will love the cake that looks like a circus tent. It's circled with animal crackers on parade.

Big Top Cake

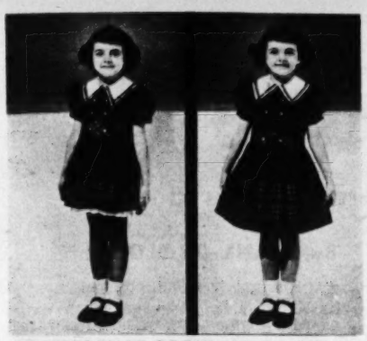
Make and bake any favorite cake in three layers or in a large tube pan. Frost with white icing. Cut circle from slightly stiff white paper, making it 2 inches larger in diameter than the pan which was used to bake the cake, i.e., if an eight inch-pan was used, make the paper circle 10 inches in diameter. At one side of paper, cut from edge to center of circle. Lap one edge of cut surface over the other about 4 inches to make conical shape of tent top. Fasten edges with transparent tape. To make scalloped edging around tent, cut strip from red paper that is 1¼ inches wide and 1 inch longer than circumference of tent top. To make scalloped edge, use a 25-cent coin. Trace scallop around coin edge, then cut out. Place scalloped circle on tent top, fasten at 6 or 8 places from the inside with tape. Cut a pennant about 4 inches long; insert tooth pick and stick in tent top.



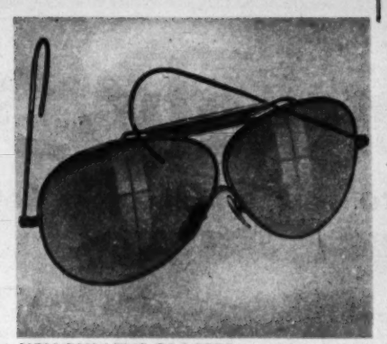
Draw a scalloped edge on strip of red paper, using 25-cent coin as guide. Cut around scallops.

To make the big top, cut circle of white paper. At side, cut from edge to center. Overlap, fasten.

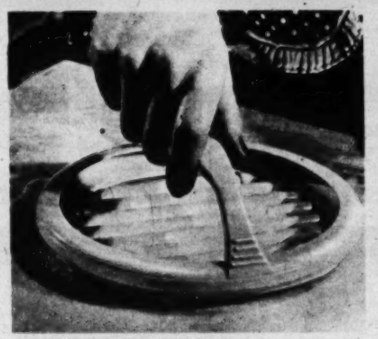
Cut pints of pre-packaged ice cream in fourths; place them in dishes; top with animal crackers.



DRESSES THAT GROW with the child are designed to be worn two full years. A deep hem plus adjustable waistline make the garments fit throughout that time.



YELLOW LENS GLASSES provide clearer vision on dull, hazy days. Admitting more light, they're for fishing, motoring, sports, or whenever weather presents hazards.



NEW ROLLING PIN has eight small rollers that run over dough more often, eliminate sticking and make pie crust dough so thin a newspaper can be read through it.

ATTACHMENT ALLOWS tank vacuum cleaner to wax and polish floors, woodwork, cars. Air turns brush rapidly. It scrubs linoleum, tile, other surfaces.

The Unmelancholy Dane

Melchior once rode a bicycle into the midst of a Lehmann aria

At 245 pounds, Lauritz Melchior believes, he's at his best singing weight. He keeps bulk down by gym work.

By FRANK DE BLOIS

AMONG WAGNERIAN TENORS, barrel-chested Lauritz Melchior holds several remarkable distinctions. Physically, at 6 feet 4, he's the biggest man in his business. He is also the possessor of the world's endurance record for singing Tristan, Tannhauser, Siegfried and Lohengrin. He's the best cook and the heartiest eater in the Metropolitan Opera Company. And, as a big game hunter, he's the hottest Dane since Beowulf.

At 58, Melchior, who weighs 245 pounds, is worth more on the hoof than any other man in serious music. Since he made his debut in his native Denmark in 1913, he has sung 217 Tristans, 177 Walkures, 144 Tannhausers, 128 Siegfrieds, 104 Gotterdammerungs, 104 Lohengrins and 80 Parsifals; and at his 20th anniversary performance in New York's Metropolitan in 1946, he sang one act each from three operas, wearing out four sopranos en route.

"Since 1930," says Melchior, who keeps a careful record of the occasions on which he has sung for profit, "I have done more than a quarter of a million dollars worth of Tristans alone."

His durability, his versatility and—of course—his massive voice have made Melchior, who in October will begin his 24th season with the Metropolitan and his 36th annual concert tour, easily the most prominent Wagnerian Heldentenor—the true heroic tenor—of his time.

As a chef and a consumer of fine food and drink, Melchior's record is equally impressive. Among his friends he is as famous for his ox-tail soup and his smorgasbord as he is for his lyrical ascents to Valhalla.

NEXT TO SINGING, HE LIKES EATING

He customarily consumes roast goose and cinnamon rice immediately after a concert, and his favorite light lunch is a tid-bit called "The Royal Guardsmen's Joy," a Melchior specialty concocted of alternate layers of sausages and potatoes spread with a cream and bread sauce and washed down with aquavit (a Danish beverage made from fermented potatoes) and a stein or two of beer.

Next to singing and eating, Melchior's favorite avocation is the hunt. And in this field, too, he stands out as a Gulliver among the Lilliputians. As a member of the Danish Royal Guard, he became a crack shot early in life and during the past 20 years he has pursued the Kodiak bear, the lion and the buffalo across four continents.

In pre-war years he used to hunt in a 3000-acre barony he owned in Poland and since the war he has insited upon a two-months' vacation each year from his concert tours and his radio and screen commitments to hunt. Two years ago he acquired with his rifle a Canadian wolfskin for his Siegmund role in March and a South American panther coat for his wife in April. This year he shot a leopard cape for Mrs. Melchior in Kenya and next year he will accept an invitation from the maharajah of Cooch Behar to hunt on the princely preserves near Calcutta.

"There," he says, "I shall get my wife a tiger."

Melchior, who became an American citizen in 1947, was born in Copenhagen March 10, 1891. He paid for his first music lessons by pawning a stamp collection he had inherited from his grandfather and made his debut as a baritone in Copenhagen's grand opera house.

In 1946, Melchior, who is most durable Wagnerian tenor of our times, celebrated 20th anniversary with New York's Metropolitan, posed with trophies and wife Kleinchen "who runs the show for me."

As a baritone, Melchior was impressive but the idea soon began to grow upon him that he really was not a baritone at all but a tenor. After considerable deliberation he withdrew from the opera and devoted himself entirely to the years of study which transformed his voice.

In 1925 he got a regular job as a tenor—and married Maria Hacker, a Bavarian motion picture actress known to her public—and to Melchior—as Kleinchen—the "little one."

His severest test in those early years came one day while he was singing for pay at a funeral. He had decided to sing a song by Grieg ending "the angel touched your forehead with a palm leaf," a lyric which sent a wave of titters through the lines of mourners. The deceased, Melchior later discovered, had made his exit from this vale after a companion had touched his forehead with a beer bottle.

For years Melchior sang Wagnerian roles on the continent and in London. In 1926 he made his debut at the Metropolitan in New York and rapidly became known as a man who thought nothing of singing at a morning musicale in Baltimore, hopping a train to make a Siegfried performance at the Met and then singing a midnight broadcast the same evening.

Stage fright—the great psychological block that most singers have to strive to surmount—never bothered the unmelancholy Melchior. He did, however, get a scare one night during a joint recital with Lotte Lehmann.

Awaiting his cue while Miss Lehmann was on stage, Melchior spied a stack of backstage bicycles belonging to a company of acrobats. Playfully, he seized one, mounted it, immediately lost control and whizzed out from the wings to the stage.

"Lehmann stopped in the middle of her aria," he recalls, "and gave me a look that still haunts me occasionally—especially in nightmares after I have eaten pickled herring and cream."

Everything about Melchior, including his sense of humor, fits into the heroic stature of his voice. Once, on leaving the apartment a friend had loaned him during a concert stay in London, Melchior left a thank-you note on the table, then dismantled his friend's bed and hid it in obscure crannies of the apartment.

On another afternoon he surreptitiously removed a friend's Stradivarius from its case, substituted a $5 violin and then, before his friend's agonized gaze, "accidently" stepped on the supposed treasure, demolishing it.

Elaborate whimsies of this type have become to Melchior as much a part of the pattern of his life as are the heroics of Siegfried or Siegmund. "Singing," he says, "I love perhaps more than anything else. But I never let singing interfere with the fine art of living."

In 1947, hunter Melchior bagged 1,800-pound black buffalo in South Dakota's Black Hills.

In 1943, Melchior made radio debut with Fred Allen. The hit he made won him movie contracts.

MUST WE GO TO CHURCH TO BE CHRISTIANS?

You've probably heard people comment at times on the fact that their Catholic neighbors go to church so often. Perhaps you have wondered yourself . . . is all this necessary?

Catholics, you may be sure, have good reasons.

Going to Mass on Sunday is, of course, an obligation for every Catholic. Confession and Holy Communion at least once a year are a sacred duty. But most Catholics go to Confession and receive Holy Communion oftener . . . some every month, some every week, some every day.

There are also many other special services and devotions for which Catholics go to church. In the average city, the Catholic Church is always open—and seldom empty. Many will enter the church at any hour of the day to visit Jesus Christ present on the altar, mindful of His invitation: "Come to Me, all you who labor and are burdened, and I will give you rest."

But, you ask, is all this necessary? Catholics believe it is.

They believe that Christ not only called upon us to honor and serve God . . . but prescribed the ways in which we should do so. He did not say how often we must go to church . . . nor how many prayers we were to recite. But He did establish a Church with the power and authority to carry on His work . . . and He promised that His Church would last to the end of time—that it would have God's protection in teaching all men to observe all things He had commanded, especially to believe and to be baptized and thereby become members of His Church to attain the purpose of their lives.

And how do Catholics know theirs is Christ's Church?

Because it possesses the distinguishing marks Christ gave His Church. It covers the earth as Christ said it would. Unchanged after nearly 2,000 years, it continues to live and grow, in fulfillment of His promise that His Church would last to the end of the world.

But the most convincing mark that He gave it is its unity of faith, worship and obedience under the authority of the lawful and historical successor of Peter, the first Bishop of Rome and the "rock" upon which Christ built His Church. Just as Peter was the first Pope and the first Vicar of Christ, so also is Pius XII the 262nd Pope and the Vicar of Christ today.

FREE—If you would like to know more about the distinguishing characteristics which Christ declared His Church must have and which the Catholic Church possesses today, we will be happy to send you without cost or obligation an interesting and enlightening pamphlet. MILE-HIGH HONEYMOON

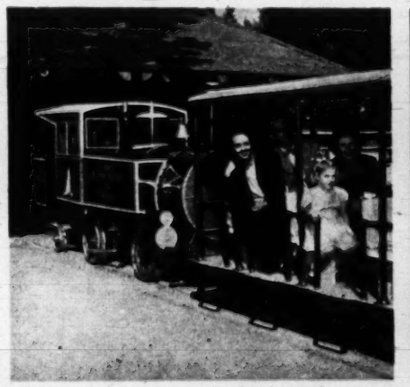
Colorado Springs hopes to become "Niagara Falls" of the West for U.S. newlyweds

BACK EAST, it's a honeymoon custom to go to Niagara and stare at a 165-foot waterfall. Out West, honeymooners in increasing numbers are climbing—by train or car—to the top of 14,110-foot Pikes Peak to look at several thousand square miles of mountains. The nearby resort city of Colorado Springs, Colo., may never attain the tremendous popularity Niagara Falls has for honeymooners (Niagara Falls claims to have entertained 500,000 newlyweds last year), but it does hope to become a great western newlywed resort.

Dagger-sharp stalactites awe them in Cave of the Winds, favorite honeymoon spot.



Midget train, pushed by half-pint locomotive, took visitors to Cheyenne Mountain zoo.

Squirming lion cub at zoo submits to petting. Zoo has 300 species of wild animals.

290 steps skirt Seven Falls, lead to "Eagle's Nest." Coming down was tiring too, Diane decided.

On a water bicycle built for two, Roy took Diane around Broadmoor Lake on a sightseeing "cruise."

Glass-topped observation car on Cog Railway, highest in the world, gave the Moores a fine view of mountain scenery during the climb to 14,110-ft. Pikes Peak.

When Roy and Diane Moore planned their honeymoon, they at once thought (being Texans) in terms of Colorado Springs. Roy and Diane had met in high school, and attended the University of Texas together. Because they decided to get married in the middle of the school year, they had to wait until summer for the honeymoon, which gave them more time to plan their trip. In June, Roy graduated, and at last they started.

Colorado Springs and Pikes Peak, Roy and Diane had heard, have everything: honeymoon suites in lodges and hotels, "peak to peak" tours, waterfalls glittering under floodlights, a Cave of the Winds bristling with stalactites and stalagmites, and a zoo 6,800 feet high.

HOLDING HANDS ON PIKES PEAK

The Moores devoted several days to the usual sight-seeing routine. They held hands on the cog railway up Pikes Peak, whispered in the Cave of the Winds, clowned for each other's snapshots among rocky towers of the Garden of the Gods.

A Pikes Peak honeymoon, Roy and Diane found, does not require a gilt-edged budget. Hotel expenses (American plan) for a five-day stay, for example, would be about $125. The cost of the major scenic tours would be approximately $60. Roy and Diane did most of their sightseeing in their own car.

After a five-day frolic, the Moores drove back home to Houston. With them they carried interesting Indian curios from souvenir shops, a camera record of the trip and a lot of pleasant memories.

Strong-man Roy flexes muscles and shows off by "lifting" cliff at Garden of the Gods.

Souvenirs—without them the trip wouldn't be complete. Diane admires an Indian rug.

Behind Shrine of the Sun, Will Rogers memorial, the Moores saw Colorado Springs.

Blow gun dart is wooden shaft with tail wad made of dried thistles. At 45 feet it's an effective weapon.

BLOW GUNS

There's nothing sinister about them; they're good outdoor sport . . .

By EMILE C. SCHURMACHER

WHENEVER BLOW GUNS ARE MENTIONED in after-dinner conversation, an eerie hush customarily falls over the house. Somehow the words have a sinister sound, conjuring up a picture of a pygmy waiting in a jungle ambush to speed a poisoned dart on its deadly errand.

Actually, as a lethal weapon the blow gun is highly over-rated. But as a source of sport it has never been appreciated.

There's no denying that when Indians of the Amazon Basin dip the tips of their blow gun darts in poisons and venoms they are fairly serious in intent. But so far as stalking an enemy in the jungle is concerned, they would probably do a more satisfactory job with a yo-yo.

In the first place, a blow gun has to be eight-feet long — and extremely cumbersome — in order to have an effective range of 15 yards. Its dart is so fragile that it can be deviated by a twig or a leaf, and its qualities of penetration are about on a par with those of a middle-aged wasp.

USED FOR CENTURIES

For centuries the blow gun has been used wherever river cane, bamboo or hollow reed has been obtainable. South American Indians probably invented it, but such North American tribes as the Iroquois, the Muskhogeans and the Cherokees long have favored it as a small game hunting arm.

In the hands of a man who can use one, a blow gun will bring down such game as squirrel, pheasant, duck and rabbit. But, unless the range is extremely short, the dart seldom kills its quarry outright. Blow gun experts usually carry a club for this reason.

Undoubtedly the best blow gun man in the U.S. today is a six-foot Cherokee Indian named Johnson Catolster, who learned the trade from his father. For all-around shooting Catolster uses an eight-foot gun equipped with darts of locust or walnut about 18 inches long and an eighth of an inch in diameter. The wad end of the dart is made of dried thistles.

"You can make a usable blow gun out of almost any kind of light, hollow wood, provided it is long and straight," says Catolster. "You can make one out of a bamboo fishing pole after you ream out the solid wood at the joints. The thistles are important and should be twisted around the dart and bound securely into place. If you can't find any thistles, a wad of cotton may be used instead."

Anyone, says Catolster, can make a blow gun and darts, but it takes an expert to work the thing properly. To fire the gun, Catolster cups his right hand around the mouth piece with his thumb over the top and his palm against his mouth. Aiming is done with the left hand which slides slightly forward. He then inhales a lungful of air and blows.

It takes a mighty puff to shoot a dart hard into a target at ten yards, but, says Catolster, you can do it if you've ever played a trumpet. Like darts, or bows-and-arrows, blow guns must be used with discretion.

In Catolster's opinion, the blow gun is a much maligned weapon. An "aura of tom-toms," he complains, has given his favorite sport a sinister reputation.

"There isn't any argument about the blow gun being a stalking weapon as far as hunting game is concerned," Catolster admits. "But most of us seem to look at it as one of those knife-in-the-back things. That just simply isn't true."

There isn't anything complicated or mysterious about shooting a blow gun, says Johnson Catolster. And as a back yard sport, it rates as pleasant as croquet.

Best blow gun shot in U.S. is Johnson Catolster, a Cherokee Indian who learned the art as a child.

At 15 yards, Catolster shoots coin from friend's hand. Smudge (upper right) is dart.

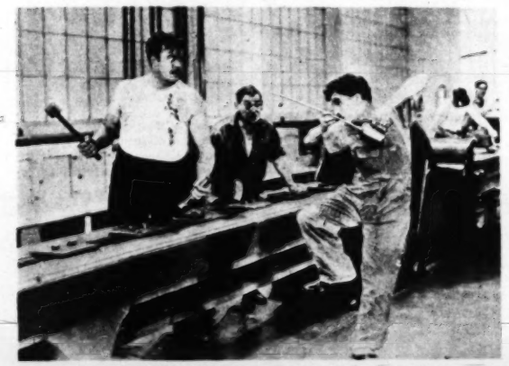
Bombastic exaggeration was the key to W. C. Fields' brand of humor. He loved waggish situations, doused them with droll patter. Above: in "My Little Chickadee."



Pantomime and pathos coupled with slapstick made Charlie Chaplin famous. He mixed laughs with sympathy. In "Modern Times" he lampooned big-time industry.

Horseplay of the Marx Brothers was never better than in "A Night at the Opera." Their technique: to caper thru crazy situations, keeping dialogue irrelevant but comic.

Clifton Webb as Mr. Belvedere in "Sitting Pretty" dashed bowl of cereal on baby's head,

Slapstick makes a comeback

By KAY SULLIVAN

OLD-FASHIONED movie slapstick—in the tradition of Charlie Chaplin and Harold Lloyd—is making a comeback.

The trend got under way last year when Clifton Webb dashed a bowl of mush on a baby's head in "Sitting Pretty." Now, roughly two out of every five of the new films have a welcome dash of lunacy — an encouraging sign. Audiences tired of the deluge of "psychological" films and crime exploitation, find it a relief to laugh at Bob Hope wrestling with a horse in an elevator in "Sorrowful Jones." Or at Cary Grant nearly pitching over a falls in a rowboat

Rapid-fire burlesque, self-deprecation keep Jimmy Durante out front. In "You're In The Army Now" he broke the laugh meter with take-off on blonde sweater girl.

Straight farce often borders on slapstick. In "It Happens Every Spring," Paul Douglas and Ray Milland have lots of fun with a baseball that dodges wood whenever thrown.

Dangling acrobatics of Harold Lloyd brought laughs to millions of movie-goers. He started film trend about hapless heroes who get in and out of ludicrous scrapes.

gave impetus to series of light comedies.

in "I Was a Male War Bride." Or at Victor McLaglen polishing off three husky assailants, then being subdued by a woman in "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon." Or at Red Skelton's attempts to get on a polo pony in "Neptune's Daughter."

Slapstick and movies were practically born in the same bed. Sennett had the formula down pat: pie throwing, a ludicrous hero and a mad chase in every film. Later, instead of custard pies, heroes and heroines tossed witty dialogue back and forth. Now slapstick is back. For those who welcome its return, PARADE presents some of the funniest slapstick scenes of all time.

Impossible situations, smart-alec patter are Bob Hope's stock-in-trade. One of his funniest scenes: in "The Paleface" when he thinks he shot Indians.

Rowdy comedy scenes, like this conflict between passenger and bus driver in "Good Sam" are side-splitting. Trend began in "It Happened One Night."

Satirical humor, deftly handled, is often as effective as slapstick. Reaction to "houseshaking scene" in "Letter to Three Wives" broke records.

"The Case of the Cautious Coquette"—by

Erle Stanley Gardner

THE GORGEOUS BLONDE WHO JINXED EVERY MAN SHE MET!

Not even the hardened D.A. could believe this glamorous, blue-eyed minx was involved in so many criminal activities—extortion, gambling and murder to name a few. Still, neither did Perry Mason, until the tete-a-tete he was enjoying with her turned out to be a trap that sent him into hiding—with a murder charge on his handsome head! Only Erle Stanley Gardner could have written this fast-paced new thriller! Publisher's edition, $2.50.

ALSO IN THIS VOLUME! In addition to the mystery novel are two Gardner novelettes: THE CASE OF THE CRIMSON KISS and THE CASE OF THE CRYING SWALLOW.

"Crooked House"—by

Agatha Christie

ANYONE COULD HAVE MURDERED THE WEALTHY 80-YEAR-OLD BRIDEGROOM!

Rich old Aristide Leonides lay twisted and dead of a strange poison while terror submerged his fabulous London house and every soul in it. None of the children and grandchildren who lived there seemed guilty, yet every one of them knew that the killer—whoever he was—had to murder! Then, like crazy summer lightning that illuminates as it destroys, death struck again! A top-notch Agatha Christie mystery novel you mustn't miss! Publisher's edition, $2.50.

"Trouble in Triplicate"—by

Rex Stout

THREE NEW MYSTERY NOVELETTES—STARRING THE AMAZING NERO WOLFE!

Here's fat, orchid-loving Nero at his rarest! Three stories in one volume! "Before I Die" is a rough-and-tumble underworld adventure; "Help Wanted, Male" is a most unusual story; "Instead of Evidence" introduces the boss of a "novelty" company just as he receives a box of his favorite cigars—loaded with the Army's new explosive! Publisher's edition, $2.50.

"Ten Days' Wonder"—by

Ellery Queen

YOUNG LOVE—AND BLACKMAIL

Blackmail was ruining the young man who had so foolishly fallen in love with the wrong man's beautiful wife—and Ellery reluctantly agreed to deal with the extortioner. Then, suddenly, what looked so open-and-shut developed into the most fantastic case of Ellery's long career! Here's a magnificent new mystery story of young love, passion and well-planned murder that will set your spine tingling and leave you breathless with excitement! Publisher's edition, $2.50.

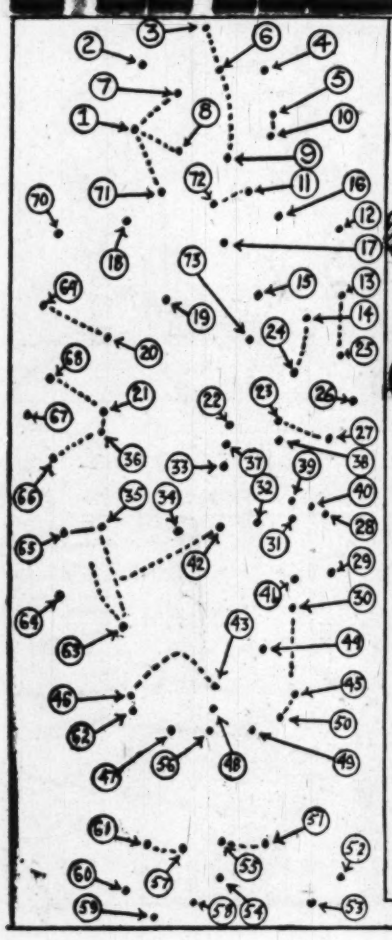
PIXIE PUZZLE ADVENTURIES

by Matt Curzon

Copyright, 1949, New York Herald Tribune Inc.



1 TRYING TO MAKE HIS GET-A-WAY WHILE THE PIXIES ARE TRAPPED IN THE CELLAR, THE VILLAIN FINDS HIMSELF LOCKED IN. ONLY THE PIXIES KNOW THE COMBINATION OF THE LOCK.

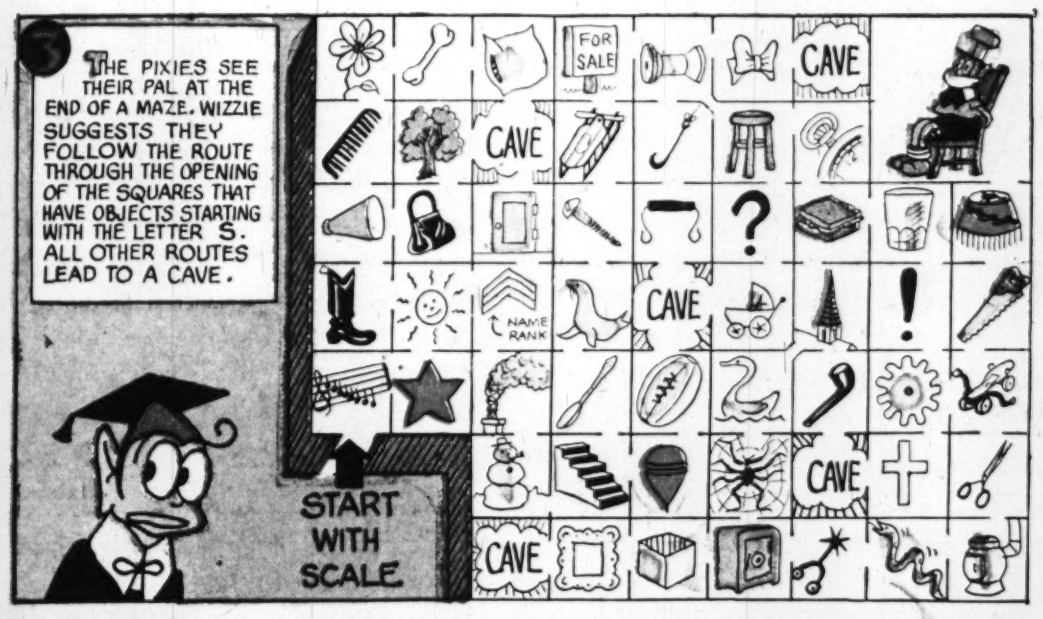
"CURSES," SNARLS THE VILLAIN, "I MUST HIDE, I HEAR THE PIXIES SOLVING THEIR WAY OUT OF MY TRAP. AH! I KNOW! I'LL GET INTO THIS COSTUME."

WHAT KIND OF COSTUME DOES THE VILLAIN WEAR? DRAW LINES FROM 1 TO 2 TO 3 ETC. THEN DRAW OVER THE DOTTED LINES.

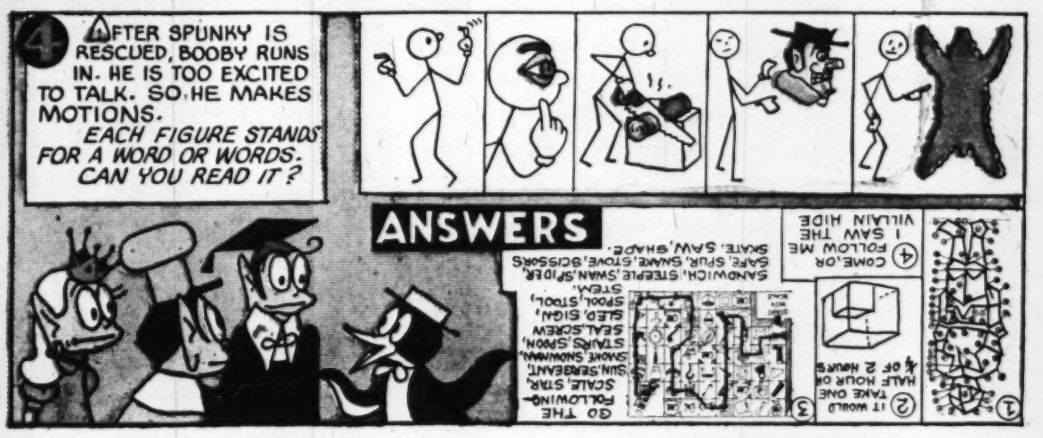
2 THE TRAPPED PIXIES SEARCH FOR SPUNKY, WHO IS MISSING.

FEE FEE SHOUTS: "I HEAR A FAINT VOICE BELOW. IT MUST BE SPUNKY!" THEY START DIGGING.

IF IT TAKES THE PIXIES 2 HOURS TO DIG A HOLE 4 FEET DEEP BY 4 FEET SQUARE, HOW LONG WOULD IT TAKE THEM TO DIG A HOLE 2 FEET DEEP BY 2 FEET SQUARE?



3 THE PIXIES SEE THEIR PAL AT THE END OF A MAZE. WIZZIE SUGGESTS THEY FOLLOW THE ROUTE THROUGH THE OPENING OF THE SQUARES THAT HAVE OBJECTS STARTING WITH THE LETTER S. ALL OTHER ROUTES LEAD TO A CAVE.



4 AFTER SPUNKY IS RESCUED, BOOBY RUNS IN. HE IS TOO EXCITED TO TALK. SO HE MAKES MOTIONS.

EACH FIGURE STANDS FOR A WORD OR WORDS. CAN YOU READ IT?

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Synopsis : PRINCE VALIANT HAS BEEN SENT TO INSPECT "THE WALL" BUILT LONG AGO BY THE ROMANS TO KEEP BACK THE WILD PICTS OF SCOTLAND. BUT HIS TROOP MEETS AN ARMY OF THE BLUE-PAINTED FIGHTERS BEFORE EVER REACHING "THE WALL".

HE SENDS JEFF BACK TO THE TROOP. "TELL THEM TO CIRCLE WIDE AROUND THE PICTS, RIDE NORTH AND MEET ME AT "THE WALL".

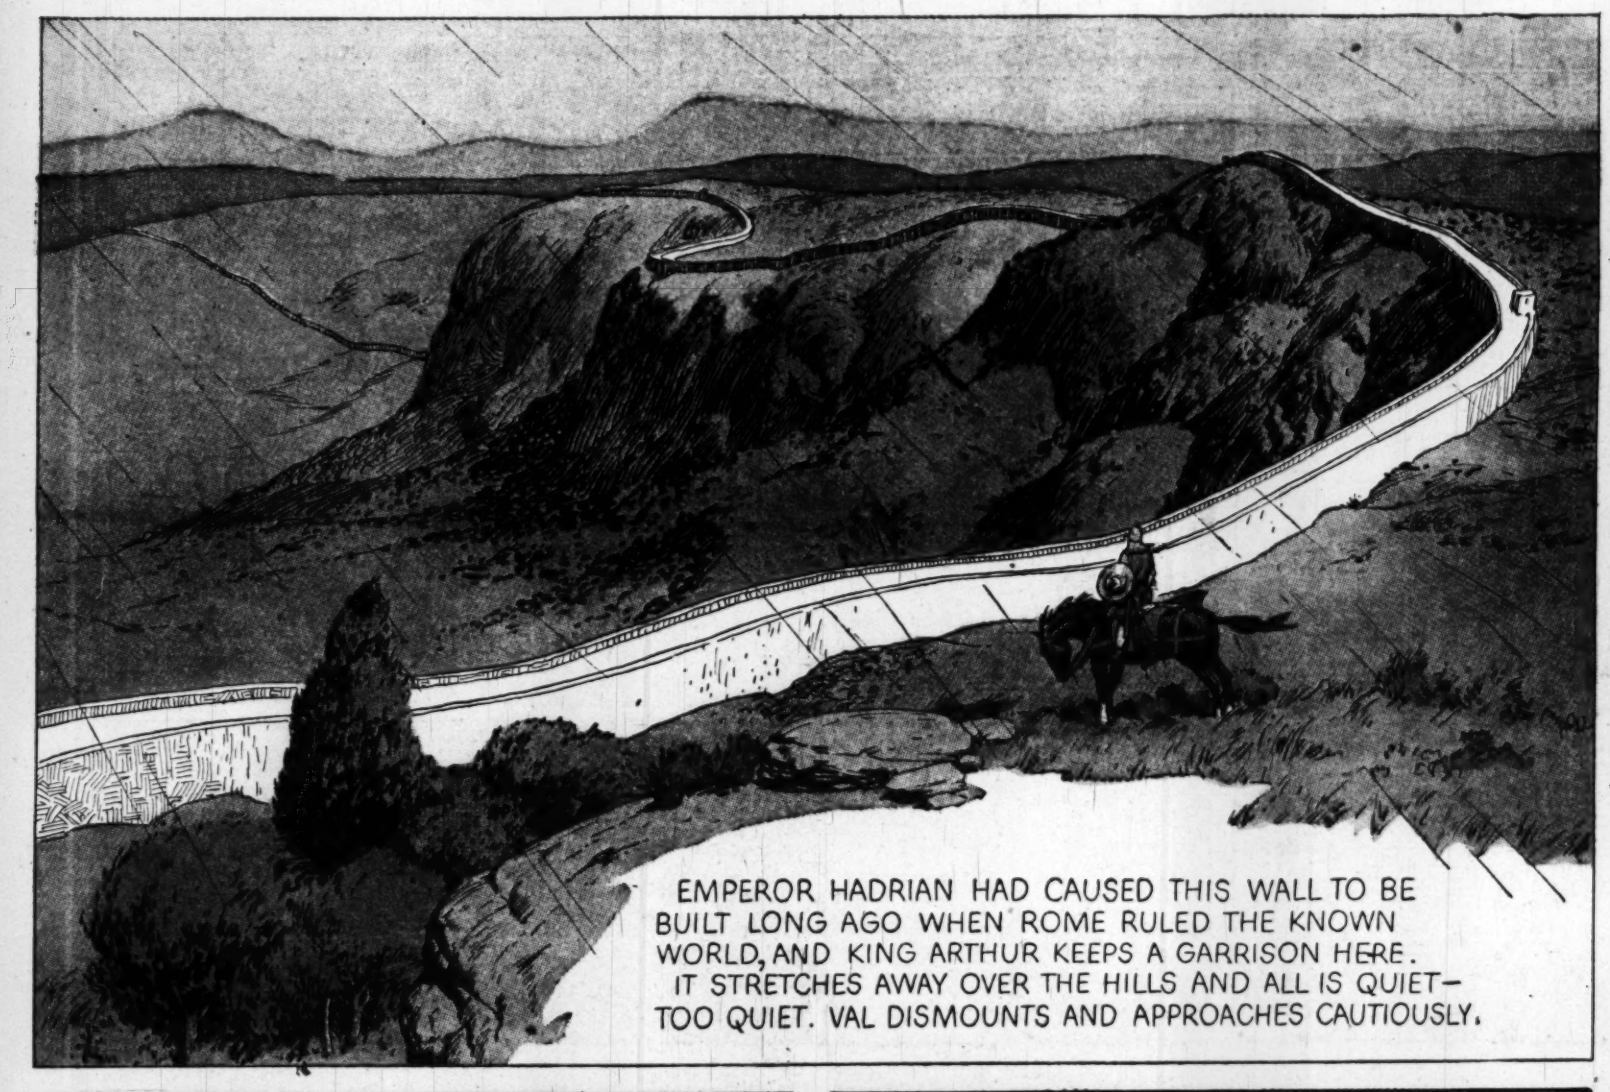
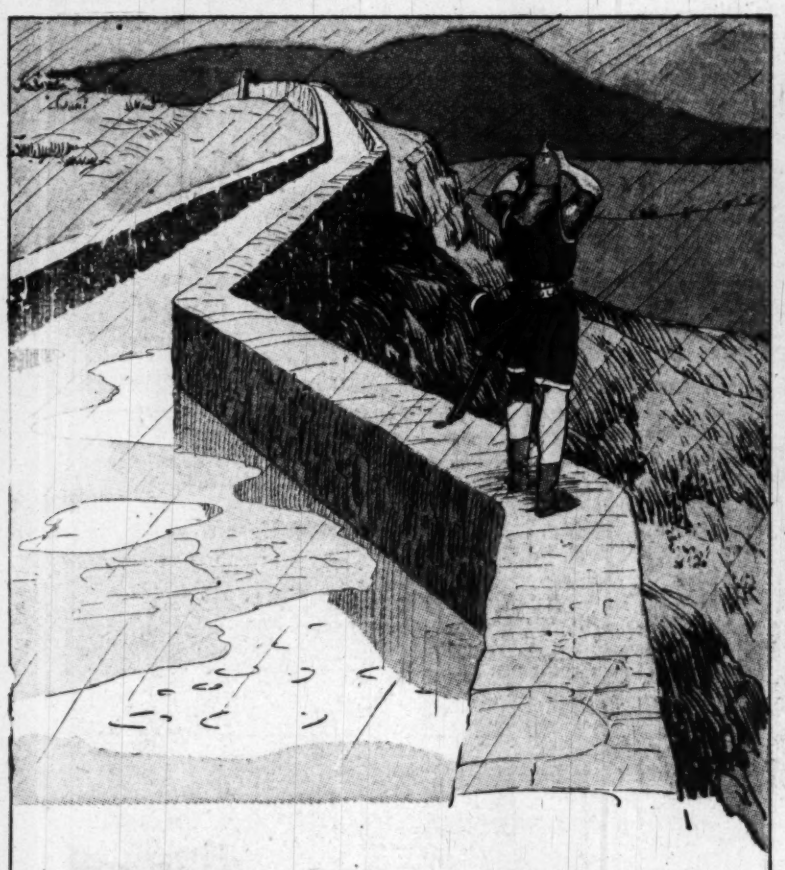
THEN HE TOO MOUNTS AND RIDES SWIFTLY NORTHWARD.

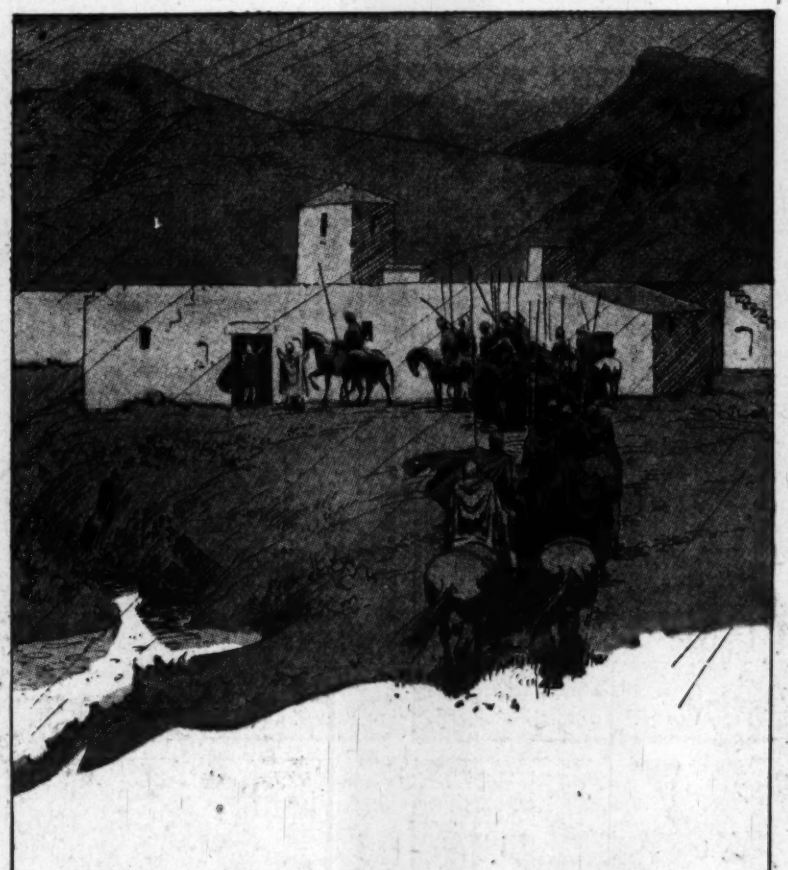


EMPEROR HADRIAN HAD CAUSED THIS WALL TO BE BUILT LONG AGO WHEN ROME RULED THE KNOWN WORLD, AND KING ARTHUR KEEPS A GARRISON HERE. IT STRETCHES AWAY OVER THE HILLS AND ALL IS QUIET— TOO QUIET. VAL DISMOUNTS AND APPROACHES CAUTIOUSLY.

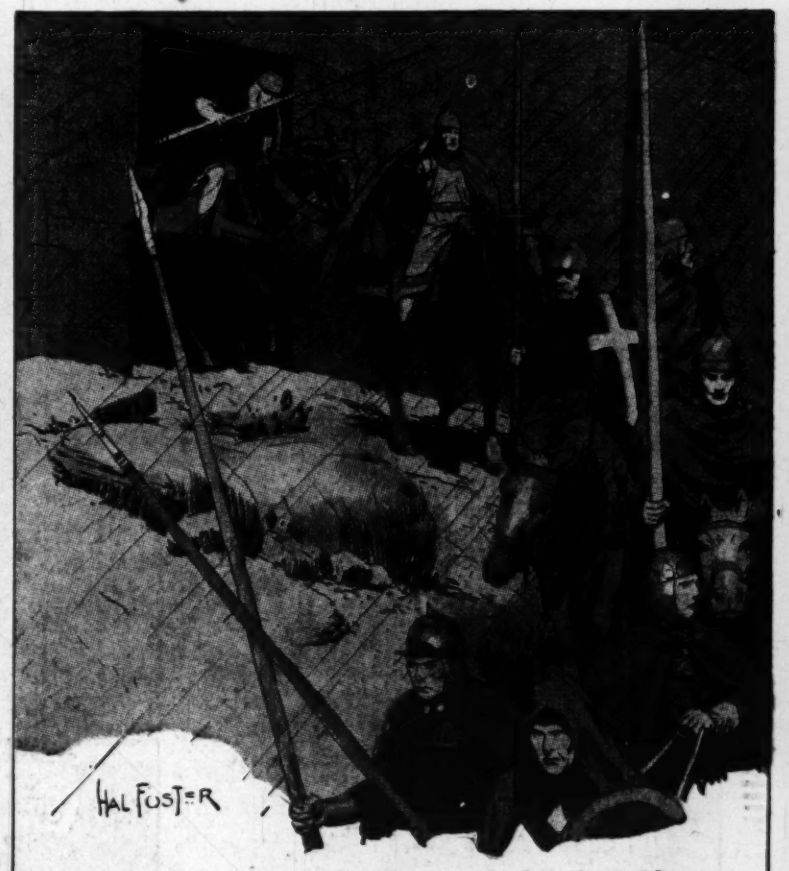
AT THE FIRST MILECASTLE HE LEARNS THE REASON FOR THIS QUIET. THE PICTS HAVE SURPRISED THE GARRISON.



ASCENDING TO THE TOP OF "THE WALL," VAL SCANS THE COUNTRYSIDE. FAR TO THE WEST HE CAN DISCERN DISTANT FIGURES MOVING TOWARD THE NEXT MILECASTLE... THERE THE BREAK-THROUGH MUST BE !



DARKNESS IS FALLING WHEN HIS TROOP ARRIVES. VAL HAS DONE SOME SCOUTING AND HAS HIS PLANS ALL LAID.



THEN THE SMALL GATEWAY LEADING INTO SCOTLAND IS OPENED AND THEY RIDE FORTH INTO THE WINDY DARKNESS ON THE ENEMY SIDE OF "THE WALL."

NEXT WEEK— Val Lets the Enemy Through.
